The children are up early and using their parents' computer.

Must have been a slow night for the geeks. After all, playing Chess and hackng into DOD sites can only offer a few scant hours of fun.

Next up? Wash your faces three times a day with soap. Before you know it, your greasy zits will disappear and the Girls may even look at you sans the derisive laughter.

Of course your Geekness and tiny Mommy restricted penises will forever haunt you.

The Fat Patroller has recently started to stalk me.
His current squeeze probably left him for someone with a bigger penis so he's cruising.

I assume you meant to refer to you as "idiot"?? and no I do it??

OK well then, I still find nothing that refers to your I DO IT copyright. I suggest you put something in writing and then feel free to take whatever legal action you might want

If I so desire, I will "violate" your "I DO IT" blog whenever and wherever I feel. Deal with it

I know there were 2 other mentally challenged people in this group but it is obvious you are their KING. I have zero use for someone who obviously prefers themselves to prove repeatedly that they are beyond help

Just one last thing, Mark. Please assure me and the rest of the amateur world that you will never upgrade and actually get on the air. I'd hate to think the amateur world would think you an prime example of the United States educational program. I seen "idiot" savant's that handle themselves better than you

Sorry thems the facts

Factual errors according to whom? With reference to what source?

In other words, who judges what is fact and what is fiction?

You wouldn't happen to have a total handy, would you? It would save a lot of time looking them all up again!

Not yet - unless you have a specific example in mind - your statement

I'll bet he'd be crushed! :)

Where's my demonstration? Other than vague references to posts over the past six months, you have presented nothing here to substantiate your claim.

Moderated newsgroups are no fun, Jim. Just a form of censorship imposed on others by those who like censorship. A moderated group would not suit your purpose either! Where else could you go but here to fulfil that pathological need of yours to publicly 'right all wrongs'?

Didn't one of the 'regulars' on this group announce with great fanfare that they were leaving RRAP to join a private BBS where they would not have to be subjected to the indignities of daily life here? And encourage everyone to join them?

Guess it wasn't much fun all alone over there - they came back!

You never left to join them in that digital Nirvana, though - ever wonder why?

>And Len won't be part of rrap much longer either.

Didn't you just finish regaling us all how all Len does is intentionally post misinformation?

Did the statement that Len will shortly be leaving the newsgroup not come from Len himself?

How did you come to the conclusion that this was fact and not misinformation? That's magical! :)

I knew that and you knew that, I knew Mark didn't knew that. After all he didn't know what a caterpillar was at the local hamfest, but it seems his "wife" did, although he "taught" "her" everything he knows

Knowing you did it is not enough? You need validation from the ARRL

Not Dawson's Creek b1tch....

Dawson Creek.. 250 reasons to like it, b1tch.

I hear there are a lot of trisexuals in Dawson Creek.. or is it just one trisexual tranny with a multitude of names?

Do you know b1tch?

Ask the Douche Defiant one if she knows

Ooops... Do these questions make you nervous for your buddy D.M. from D.C. ?

Why don't you fess up? You have no quotes and no facts.
You make wild, baseless accusations.

the larval stage of a butterfly or a moth. See: lepidoptera.

To the best of my knowledge, we don't allow inter-species marriages yet in the USA.

Harassment doesn't occur simply because you dislike what someone posts in a public forum.

What hate?

You're a self-proclaimed gay pagan dyslexic ham.

Are all hams gay pagan and dyslexic?

Categorizing all 'extra' class operators on the basis of the actions of one (or a few) would be akin to me classifying all hams as gay pagan dyslexics, using you as the poster boy.

Sorry to burst your stereotype.

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

Sigh...here we go seven years into the past...sort of like that old CBS program "You Are There." The one that opened with the announcer saying, "All things are as they were then...and you are there."

Or even the old Lone Ranger program, "Come with us now to the days of yesteryear...and the thundering hooves of the grate hoarse Jimmie" [paraphrased]

Oh, oh, here comes the "promise" of Extra-out-of-the-box."
Seven years ago I was supposed to have "promised" something that had some kind of "moral imperative" to it, like "do it or forever be silent" and other assorted bullshit from the control freaks in here. :-(

In a way that is good. Folkses won't discuss my even-earlier "promises" I made to certain ladies of my bachelor days! :-) <phew>

"Pathological?" My take on that was 'congenital.'

"Captain Righteous!" One of the X-Men, soon to be in a Marvel Comics at your neighborhood newsstand!

Picture the offspring of "Baitman" and "Oblivious Man." Mighty muskles all over in that tight suit of his, but wearing his shorts on the outside instead of inside.

We will never know. Captain Righteous will immediately shift to my "faults" and never, ever admit his "why."

Mike Coslo didn't do anything wrong. Nobody wanted to join him so that all would have a happy, happy, we-all-think-the-same kaffeklatsch.

The buzz should be about hive minds...

"Everything I say is a lie."

If it is a "lie" then that sentence cannot be true because it is encompassed by "everything." Ergo, I do not lie.
But, I MUST be lying! :-)

A classic conundrum. Jimmie trying to beat it.

Boom, boom.

On the other hand (besides four fingers and a thumb), maybe I WON'T go away? See, if I said I was "going," then that would be a lie...and, in order to fulfill the Mighty Masters of Macho Morse wishes that I am lying, then I must be planning to stay here. If I lie then I can't possibly be going. But, I am supposed to go, yet I haven't so there-

Please pass the Tylenol.

Agreed. After a few days I looked around more and didn't see near as much talk on it. Of course, that was primarily a "southerner" thing (relatively speaking from northerners' point of view).

NOT so down here. :-(Interestingly, www.qrz.com seemed to have deliberately down-played the whole thing. www.eham.net did not. Of course "QRZ" is also a business and can't alienate one group v. another without risking some loss. ARRL is playing it cagey now and won't commit much of an opinion...but their publishing part of their house must keep making a profit in order to survive.

>And the world did not end! (doomsayers take note) :)

Now, THAT's debateable! :-)

In USA amateur radio history since 1934, FCC 06-178 may go down as the premiere earth-shattering event, even more than the cessation of amaterur operations due to our involvement in WW II. Never before had morse code testing been totally eliminated in the 73-year span of our FCC. Hadn't happened in the three previous radio regulating agencies here, either, not since 1912.

>Next up looks like a new "Foundation" licence category may be on the

I've seen a few things on the "Foundation" license but haven't gauged it. There were also a few hit remarks from certain types in the yew-kai about that. I was bouyed in spirit by the Australians about radio in general for years. All across the 'classes' and that may be due to their 'last frontier' spirit having vast spaces of not much and begun after the USA revolted.
All kinds of parts stores/vendors on the web, activity websites, etc. New Zealand, too, although smaller yet the distances are still vast.

I've always wondered if Canada was going to be infected
by nearness of certain American opinions/bigotry.
Sharing an immense border and proximity of so many large urban areas at the border would seem to invite some kind of social cross-pollination. Looking back, I'd say that Canada has NOT been polluted, but has remained relatively independent. I applaud that.

>Wonder if that's something which will start up down your way too? (or >perhaps the Tech license already fills this requirement?) I'd bet >that discussion would keep the 'regulars' on this group busy for the >next decade!

The only thing I've seen were a few Petitions to the FCC and some scattered nattering. Most of the oldetyme vocal hammes here look down at Techs as kiddies in radio. They TOLERATE them in the main, but seldom regard them as anything close to equals. That's a pity here since Techs now make up HALF of all US amateur licensees. Sort of like the French Revolution with the "royalty" minority represented by the olde-tyme
morsemen and a huge, huge group of "commoners" (Techs) that have begun "storming the Bastille." Or another analogy, the "storming of the Winter Palace." Da? :-)

However, the little FRS handhelds have been quietly out-pacing ALL the multi-button ham HTs. In the 2003 transcript of the FCC's panel on overviewing "Part 15" devices (unlicensed radios), one of the panelsts said that FRS radios "now" (2003) numbered 15 MILLION here.
In numbers, that's on par with CB, a much much older radio service. The usual pooh-pooh attitude from the olde-tymers is that they are "short range." Heh, AS IF those olde-tymers were all Collossi standing astride continents! With 40 to 100 W PEP and at the mercy of the ionosphere at HF, they could talk "long distances" any time they felt like doing so? No way.

Between FRS, CB, and cell phones down here the USA has roughly 130 MILLION two-way radios, all unlicensed, useable by ordinary citizens. Toss in all the R-C for modelers, Bluetooth and IEEE 802 wireless links, all the WLANS, wireless doorbells, wireless security cameras, cordless telephones, etc., and there's maybe another 50 million unlicensed radios working away here. Somehow those things just don't penetrate the USA olde-tymer's heads. They can't understand that 1950s paradigms just don't apply any more. Those old paradigms aren't worth two cents now. But, the olde-tymers are undaunted and proceed AS IF time had stood still while they stood on ornate crumbly-clay pedestals. :-(

His US license status isn't material to the question.

If he is violating the laws of a sovereign country (including being in that country 'undocumented'), that is by definition an illegal act in that country. If XE1ABC sneaks across the Rio Grande, his Mexican amateur license status isn't material to the question of his legal status, no matter how fast he can beep.

combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you

I'd hope "she" was a tad more literate than "her" "husband"

this seems to be the case.

Not really. I asked you, why, as someone who opposes a moderated group as censorship insists on practicing censorship on something he posts on

You seem to have difficulty with the concept that you practice the very thing you are opposed to

I believe there's a word for that, but it escapes me at the moment get your attributes correct Mark. The post was not directed at you, it was directed at:

Brian Buttinski

nothing to steal. All available right out in the open and how does one harass someone in a public forum. If you don't like something ignore it

try that again in English

if you're gonna play lawyer, learn sentence structure

And I posted my name Dean M. That's my name (albeit missing a few letters on the last part) but still my legal Christian name

I would think about that before speaking for BB. It smacks of something not quite right

besides BB =hotham and cheese and you the name of 1000 fake addresses (used only to try and bypass killfilters) really shouldn't be lecturing anyone

Amateur TV on a balloon or maybe by a ham in a Cesna airplane would be interesting. Also, along with the NTSC link, do a digital TV one as well (the encoder and modulator side of things can be bought at not outrageous cost, and the receive end can be a consumer digital TV tuned to a "cable" channel that happens to be the ham band). "Yeah, but a cell phone does that", but not at this level of picture quality.

Most people don't realize how much infrastructure it takes to have flame wars on newsgroups via the Internet. :-) They need to understand that before they can appreciate that hams can talk to other hams worldwide without any infrastructure other than their own radios and antennas.

"No kids, no lids, and no space cadets!"....

The ARRL should place a few ads in CB magazines to announce the no code HF licenses. Not that we would want "freebander" style activity to leak into the ham bands, but some "freebanders" may want to "repent" and get into legal radio (sure, it sounds hokey, but what the hell...). But it needs to be clear that they must quit the "freeband" once they become hams. And maybe some elmers can help them convert that "lynaear" into a clean and proper linear for 10m....

It would be fine for a ham to use on 2m, but not for anyone on MURS.

It'd be nice to have a single radio for multiple services, but the FCC rules don't allow that.

One could simply tape the over-the-air code test and play it over and over to "copy" it, and then submit it. But that's getting kinda lame....

However, he violated the laws regulating radio transmissions in a foreign country. FCC Part 97 requires that licesnsed operators obey the radio transmission statutes of foreign countries, does it not?

Taken to its extreme, if the FCC permits amateurs to flout Burmese radio laws, then the FCC should be willing to accept the consequences of Burmese hams coming to the USA and setting up illegal transmitting stations here.

That's why we have treaties...or so I thought.

I've never really run into a situation where I have needed a linear amplifier for 10m. When the band is open, 100W PEP or less is all your need on 10m. When the band is not open, 5KW will not help.

Commercial radio beat us again...they are the first to come out with a significant release of digital radio. Amateur radio's contribution is insignificant. I know, there are a few expensive rice boxes out there that use it but the Ibiquity commercial format is already present and in fact pervasive. Must be that darn old CW requirement that held us back again.

I will say that the FM sure sounds fantastic on my Boston Acoustics Receptor HD Radio receiver. The multicasting feature of HD2 is a big step forward. I have one station in my area that does HD2 now but I understand the FCC license for this is still considered "experimental". No AM stations in my area use HD it and I understand AM commercial cannot use it at night because AM "HD" in this format takes up about 10 KHz so interference becomes a problem. Amateurs could probably come up with something at half that bandwidth using SSB, with a sound that is as good as existing mono FM.

not the requirement so much as the attitude created by it

CW does not create attitudes. People creat attitudes.

Considering how "effortlessly" you suck Snarky's cock, you're the last person to accuse anyone of being jizz-crazy.

So how's Snarky's cock treating ya? :)

The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." Tsk, you are NOT answering Miccolis' question.

I'll try again:

Are you so intimate with Miccolis that you speak for him?

Yes or no.

"Intimate" does not automatically include sexual intimacy.

Why can't Miccolis answer for himself?

>> Miccolis, as usual, INFERRED something but never supplied >> any details. Inference is NOT fact.
>You aren't quoting Jim correctly and you know it.

Writing "I've been in that situation too...more recently than the 1950s" says NOTHING of detail. It has NO factual basis. It is INFERENCE.

>> That fine example of the modern American amateur extra, >> Steven James Robeson was doing that for years. Never

>Let's face it, Len. You don't know if Steve's statements are accurate >web. Did you ever find it?

WHERE "on the web" is this "confirmation?"

Tsk, I was the one pointing out the authoritative source for military records at NARA, National Archives and Records Administration, in St. Louis. I also repeated their explanation of who is entitled to information.

Didn't you read that? It is still available at NARA.
But only to law enforcement personnel or the individual who is on the records or his blood relations.

Are you in law enforcement? Do you have a nice shiny shield in a wallet with your station callsign on it?
That is NOT an ID of real law enforcement.

Robesin is a FAKE, a FRAUD, a bluffer who has NOT ONCE made available ANY document copies of HIS to anyone.

Why do you defend fakes, frauds, and bluffers? Maybe you LIKE those types of sociopaths?

>Let's review facts, shall we?

You have NO "facts" which are referencible.

>I served in Vietnam, a country which >was at war during my service. I drew combat pay for the entire period >of that Vietnam service.

"Drawing combat pay" is NO "reference" to actually being
IN combat. Military pay is an administrative function.
Neither do you have third-party PROOF of this "combat pay" (a supplement to regular military monthly income)
that is visible to anyone.

Your statement is INFERENCE and only YOUR statement.

>> You never did much in >> Vietnam therefore you don't have any details to supply.
>I could supply you with plenty of details.

Feel free to do so.

>I've advised that you could easily find almost exactly what >I did elsewhere on the internet. Look for it or not, I don't care.

WHERE is this "easily found" data?

WHO can access it?

You are BLUFFING.

>> You were never in combat against the Viet Cong...
>Fact: You have no idea what I did in Vietnam.

Quite true! You will NOT supply any information.

You don't know where third-party records are kept.

You wish to make braggart claims made by yourself and state those are "FACTS." They are NOT fact. They are simply CLAIMS.

You are behaving exactly like that fraud Robesin behaved for years in here.

>> I am still in contact with both civilian and military >> personnel who worked at the same signal facilities I did and >> at the same time.
>And? Do you believe yourself to be the only person on the planet who >maintains contact with those he served with in the military?

I do not. But, you have NOT said anything of substance, only substituted a QUESTION in an attempt to misdirect.

You use a good misdirection ploy, but it is ONLY a misdirection ploy.

If you have actual PROOF, then copies of such proof will (if not forged) be enough proof. You have NOT provided such proof.

You are behaving exactly like Robesin...his bluff was just "call the VA." A delaying tactic until he could think up another bluff.

The Veterans Administration will NOT automatically divulge such information to just anyone. They confirm such data through NARA.

>My service, like yours, is also history and fact. The big difference is >that I haven't shared my history with you. Now what?

Now you must prove your "history and fact." Personal claims are NOT fact.

Your bluffing period is over. Produce some copies of referenced documents, OFFICIAL documents.

>You simply don't know that. You don't have any information.

Tsk, you CANNOT PROVE something with null data.

You are trying to misdirect again. If you have this "information" then you should have no qualms about sharing it. So far you haven't revealed ANY data other than your CLAIM.

>We can see >what you do without facts and we know what you've written about others >when you have a few facts.

I call obvious bluffers for bluffers. I call obvious liars for liars. I call obvious "snake oil salesmen" for "snake oil salesment." I put you down for all three.

>> How much military training has Miccolis received?
>He hasn't told me. I don't suppose that he has told you either.
>
>> Answer: NONE.
>You don't know that.

Miccolis said he never served in any military.

Are there "easy places on the web" where one can find personal data about the NEVER SERVING?

Show us how you "PROVE" something with a NOTHING.

All one can prove with a nothing is nothing.

>> He wants to "lecture me" on how I >> treat REAL military veterans?
>I think he can observe your actions here.

"WE" call all see YOUR actions here.

You simply disguise your personal hatred for someone with allegations of misconduct or lying, whether it be on personal military service or anything else.

That is quite visible to all.

>I made no factual error there, Len.

You have "made" nothing. You have NO references, will not tell anyone where those "easy" references are found on the Internet.

You are simply trying to "PROVE" something with NOTHING.

That is bluffing, that is lying. That is the standard operating procedure of Robesin in here for years.

>I moved the "You rant about getting into amateur radio but you've never >gotten into amateur radio or even tried to do so" portion of my quote >text back to where it belongs to illustrate the lengths you'll go to in >order to create diversion, to pretend that my words were about something >else.

You are describing YOUR actions in here, not mine.

You are acting as "reply agent" for Miccolis. Why are you inserting all these statements of YOUR personal dislike and terrible "CHARGES" of misconduct in here? If you are reply agent, why cannot you include his personal dislike instead of your own.

Answer: You are attempting a technique of denigration of others through selective editing, false "interpretations" of what "others really think or do." Example:

>You tale about the artillery barrage you were never in relates to >the amateur radio service you were never in.

There is NO relation. That is a MANUFACTURED charge.

Are you trying to say that "amateur radio service" is involved in artillery fire? [other than in newsgroups]

Are you saying that ONLY radio amateurs "experience combat?"

Other than making specious CLAIMS of your own, what is your point OTHER than trying to denigrate and defame your perceived opponents in here?

You and alleged "military expert" Miccolis have gone on and on and on and on about a long-ago post in here as if it were some sort of "prime moral-ethical felony" that should be "punished" in a court of law. Why? For only one plausible reason: Your own personal vendetta against someone who doesn't agree with your own self-aggrandizement, self-defined "importance" AS IF you were "superior" in all aspects of everything. BS.

You and Miccolis have MANUFACTURED some mytical moral perfidy of "not completing" some sort of imaginary "promise" to achieve an amateur extra class license exam. That seven-year-old statement was NEVER a "promise" but a simple comment AT THE TIME. Miccolis began manufacture out of his own SPITE to "get back" at one of his critics. You, as well-behaved little monkey, took up the chittering for the same reason.

You two have made a spiteful little noise in here about past statements, ones that were NOT DONE AT THE TIME of the original posting. You wish to keep OLD arguments going and going and going for WHAT reason? Other than to please yourself. You wish to be JUDGE OF ALL, yet have NO authorization and are "guilty" of other "crimes."

>> I've stated in the beginning in here, and continuously >> up to now that my purpose was the advocacy of elimination >> of the code test for a license.

>So? Who asked you?

No one. Are you the "new moderator" for RRAP? Are you
"qualified" to pick and choose who gets to say what?

You are NOT so qualified, indeed should RECUSE yourself from any such attempts and trying to silence your opponents.

The code test for ALL amateur radio licenses will be gone after 23 Feb 07. That has nothing to do with your "combat pay" (whether that was real or imaginary in your mind) nor of your attempts at being JUDGE OF ALL just because you feel you are. FCC 06-178 was a decision of the FCC based upon a democratic process of proposal-commentary-decision by the only civil radio regulating agency of the United States. Whether YOU like it or not has no bearing on your own sociopathic conduct in here, one-sided thinking and attempts at silencing (by any means you feel necessary)
your own "opponents."

>It was not about getting into amateur radio. It was a story you've told >countless times here, but it was not about getting into amateur radio.

"Countless times?" No. "Countless" relates towards infinity. Your own mind, busy busy trying to MANUFACTURE some false moral-ethical perfidy, has conjured so badly you've lost the ability to count.

Are YOU "involved in getting into amateur radio?"
How is such "involvement" done? By sitting in an amateur radio newsgroup and berating all who do not agree with you? Or are you constantly going to VE sessions and taking tests all the time?

How do you "qualify" BERATING all who disagree with your opinions (and greatness of self-worth) with getting anyone IN AMATEUR RADIO (other than sado-masochists)?

Why do you set yourself up as some kind of "king" or
"emperor," the only one to JUDGE what others can do?

>Great, Len. A number of us have experience with long haul HF >communications for periods of much longer than three years.

A "number of you?" '1' is a number. I would count Hans Brakob as that one, having served the USN in radio. Who are the "YOU" you refer to?

You've related snippets of information about the Department of State stations at Embassies (counsolates?)

but have yet to provide any NUMBERS. Did ANY of them have three dozen high-power HF transmitters capable of 24/7 operation? Plus VHF and UHF microwave radio relay equipment to back up links with a command center?
Did any of "your" State stations relay messages at a rate of greater than 200 thousand a month? Well, did they?

You wish to denigrate the efforts of a whole battalion of signalmen on keeping one of many links of federal government communication operating during the Cold War just on the basis of your personal dislike of a newsgroup opponent? Why are you so anti-Army? Why do you wish to denigrate the whole Department of Defense of the United States of America?

>I'm sorry that it bothers you that my work permitted me to operate from >some rare spots.

Bothers me NOT. Embassies and consulates are necessary for the United States. They are NOT "amateur radio station" are they? They are NOT "military radio stations," are they?

Just WHY do you think that military radio networks were "smaller" than State's? That they are "lesser" in importance so much that you feel free to denigrate and defame anyone who served in them? Why do you seem to hate the US military so much?

>You have a real inferiority complex, don't you?

None at all. I know what I am, I know what I've done,
I know my capabilities. I am content with what I've accomplished and have enthusiasm for what I MIGHT do in the future. I don't need to brag or bluff or make vague CLAIMS of what I've done at any time in my life. You see, I DO have references, third-party references, am not afraid to post public data on such where it does not conflict with national security or business details. I HAVE posted some of that. Not for my personal aggrandizement, not for bragging or bluffing, just as personal history or for those who might be interested in radio as it was done a half century ago. I can post much more of that but it takes away time that I would rather spend enjoying for my own activities.

You seem to conveniently IGNORE statements I've made in the past on what I've done, the available digital copies of documents I have. Naturally you want to ignore those or simply shine them off.

They are in opposition to your little personal vendettas of denigrating all your "opponents."

>Let me turn that around for you, Len. You act arrogant, bossy and >self-righteous here and you aren't even involved in amateur radio.
>You're a non-participant in amateur radio.

Tsk. Are you constantly trying to be JUDGE of who gets access in "your" newsgroup? Who appointed you?
Besides yourself, that is. Or do you think you ARE God?!?

I act firmly, actively, and don't go in for gratuitous
nice-nice phrases to the obvious "superiority complex" types such as yourself. I don't honor and respect the ARRL. I don't honor and respect olde-tyme morsemen who insist that their morsemanship makes them "superior" to all others.

Why do you have such a failure to understand what I've said? I stated long ago and kept repeating that I was an advocate for eliminating the morse code test for US amateur radio testing. I never said I was a "participant" in licensed radio amateurism. I have been a HOBBYIST in radio and electronics since 1947.
NO license was required for that. Why do you constantly look down on hobbyists who are not
"licensed?"

>> Amateur radio is basically a HOBBY.
>What does the FCC call it, Len?

What part of "BASICALLY a hobby" does Heil not understand?

>You've commented. You still are not a part of amateur radio.
>Got that, wizened geezer?

"Wizened geezer?"

Is that Heil's habit to continue denigration of others who are chronologically older than he? Must be.

>There is nothing to indicate that your scenario is based in fact. There >simply aren't many free services from the ARRL, Len. It charges >additional fees for most things. The DXCC program used to cost the

What some New Englanders do as a business while disguised concern. If it is yours, then complain to THEM.

Puppeteers do not hypnotize. I can, and have, yanked chains. Have you considered oiling yours? They are rather rusty.

>No one has spouted more deliberate distortion and untruths in this >newsgroup regarding the state of amateur radio than you, Len.

Tsk. "Big Brother truths." "Truthspeak." George Orwell would have a chuckle or two over your statement.

I know of none who've spouted (and spit) more deliberate distortion and untruths than the olde-tyme morsemen.
Yourself included. See? You aren't forgotten!

>I can think of only a few pseudo-friends you have here in the newsgroup, >Leonard.

I have few "friends" in this newsgroup. I do not expect to have any. I don't look for "love" in the wrong places.
Some of us are like-minded on opposition to the code test.
We feel various degrees of victory in FCC 06-178. Tsk, that must make the pro-coders very irritated. Boo hoo.

My friends and acquaintences OUTSIDE of this newsgroup are more and varied than you think. There's no sense is being detailed about that since your hatred would only cause you to insult THEM as well...

>I don't care for you at all.

NO?!? :-) Irrelevant. Newsgroups are NOT cozy little kaffeklatsch gatherings of hive minds, all "enjoying" the same nice-nice about shared likes. They are places of DEBATE ABOUT IDEAS, LAWS, and SUBJECTS, not personalities who feel they should DICTATE who says what and where.

Why do you DICTATE so much?

>I've leveled with you very often, Len. You didn't like it.

"Leveled?!?" Hardly. You've been busy busy busy INFERRING things, telling half-truths, insulting all who disagreed with you.

Heh, if your "level" were used in Pisa, that leaning tower would have fallen centuries ago...

>I think there are things in which you've been a success, Len and I >believe that there are things in which you've been a failure.

I admit to failure in not inventing anti-gravity. Something was always holding me down...

I've toasted. I've never boasted.

>It hasn't happened.

Has the universe ended? :-)

I've never been tried for anything. Have you been tried?

For yourself then. My teeth are firmly in place, do not come out at night, will only come out if a DDS does it under anaesthetic. Are you now an "expert" on dentistry?

Of course you are an "expert" on dentistry...you were tested and passed under maximal-rate morse code!

>There's not any really solid indication that your statement is factual.

Believe what you want to believe. Fairy tales for you?
Pipe-dreams? Peyote-induced glory and magnificence?

>You still seem to think that you are somehow involved, that you're
>"one of the guys" in amateur radio.

I was just trying to eliminate the code test for US amateur radio licensing. No "licensing requirements" needed for that. Hello? That code test was all about GETTING INTO amateur radio.

What part of "being IN a licensed radio service" do you NOT understand? Hello? Getting INTO something does NOT mean
"being IN" something. Are you clear on that?

We all get the idea that YOU consider hobbists without an "official" amateur license to be anything but "lesser" than Mighty Macho Masters of Morse who've been licensed forever in the marvelous SERVICE of amateurism. <sigh> Some folks are SO deluded...may even harbor delusions of immortality!

I've been IN the larger world of ALL radio, little man.
For a long time now. I was only advocating the elimination of the code test for a US amateur radio license. There is NO law that forbids me from commenting to my government on such advocacy. In HERE, there is some misguided "law" which "forbids" such advocacy?

Too bad. My governmen listened and acted. Bye-bye code test after 23 Feb 07.

All that seems to be left are all you mighty macho masters of morse sitting around spitting and spouting and trying to heap abuse on us NCTAs. Now just WHO is the delusional, the sociopathic sunsabishes sweating over keyboards NOW?
Hmmm?

>The name "Walter Mitty" comes to mind when I think of you.

Danny Kaye played that role in a funny movie. Nice guy.
Went to one of his TV shows long ago, enjoyed it with the rest of the audience. Kaye (rest his soul) had appreciation for a wide group of people he entertained.

Now, how come I think of an overweight Don Knotts for you? :-)

"Endeavor?" That's not the space shuttle I saw being built by Rockwell. Husband of one of my schoolchums worked on that. I've helped test out space shuttle main engines at another division of Rockwell (now a Boeing division). "Atlantis" was the SS I saw up close and personal. Not "Endeavor."

Can you be more specific?

I've been an electronics design engineer for over three decades. Proof is in all kinds of documents, from personnel records to drawing sign-offs as approving project engineer.

I've been a part-time professional writer, some on hobby electronics. Was a part-time Associate Editor of a ham-interest monthly...was listed on the masthead.

I'm also an illustrator (an artist who draws things as they really are). Have done that for both money and for my own pleasure.

I've even rebuilt several rooms in our southern house, some of that requiring government approval. None of the above required I be LICENSED AS AN AMATEUR with the federal government!

Oh, my, I've "failed established requirements?" No.
I 'partook.' Things got done. Oh, my, and the FCC eliminated the morse code test for US amateur radio license testing! Oh, my! And I was a Commenter on the NPRM! [my name is listed in the last half of FCC 06-178, sunnuvagun!]

>I told you that you don't know me.

"Countless" times! :-)

Hey, if you don't wanna share anything then go sit in the corner and pout.

>You have precious little in the way of fact.

Tsk, tsk, I have lots and lots of FACT. Bookshelves full of books and notebooks of things I've done in my workshop. Now it may not be "precious" but it DOES exist.

>I'm a large man, Len and I've stomped the old terra.

Tsk, was that a Scottish terra or a wire-haired terra?

Why do you treat dogs so brutally?

Would you "stomp" a german shepherd?

>I've enjoyed 43
>years of amateur radio and I plan to enjoy another decade or two.

Have a ball, "Mr. DX." Is anyone stopping you? :-)

A newsgroup is NOT licensed amateur radio.

>I'm not pained to see that you won't be joining in on the fun.

You have precious little in the way of fact. :-)

You have NO ability to predict the future. Some wonder if you have any future at all...

I didn't choose to respond with a yes or no.

Explain just how you meant the word, Len.

He can and may. You'll have to be patient.

That is incorrect. The statement may be completely factual. That I didn't write a word about NARA. You once said that there were no free sites where such information could be found, yet I found one. I even shared the url with others who post here.

> Didn't you read that? It is still available at NARA.

That's nice.

No, Len, but then I didn't request information from NARA.

No, Len, I don't, but there's an idea for you. Get one of those "amateur radio operator" badges and you can pretend that you're one of the gang.

> That is NOT an ID of real law enforcement.

No kidding? Do you think many people are fooled by it?

No, Len, you statement is not factual. It is simply that he hasn't presented any confirming documentation to you.

I told you, I've found information on a free site which confirms Steve's service in the USMC.

"Referenceable", Len.

A fact is a fact whether you can confirm it or not.

Did you receive combat pay in Japan during the Korean War or any period

That's incorrect, Leonard. I have proof of my statement and it is most certainly visible. It just isn't visible to you.

That's also incorrect. A fact is a fact whether confirmation has been submitted to Leonard H. Anderson or not.

To misdirect what, Len? Who cares whether you maintain contact with anyone you served with in the military? That isn't unique.

Not at all, Leonard, it is an indication of the likelihood that few people care.

That's right, I have not provided it and will not provide it. Now what will you do?

There is no one named "Robesin" who has posted here. If you mean Steve Robeson, I'm not behaving like him at all. I haven't told you to call the VA. I've told you that I've posted material on the internet that states what I did in the military and that I am not going to provide you with any information.

Where's the misdirection, Len. The misdirection can be found in your deliberate falsehoods regarding my military service. You're doing it with no information. You write "REMF" and "barracks brawls" and you have no facts on which to base those statements. You've previously written statements to the effect that you'd never denigrate the military service of another veteran. Your most recent statements give lie to your words.

I don't care if you prove something or not. I do know that when it comes to my military service, you've got NOTHING.

I don't hate you, Len. There are times when I almost feel sorry for you. You aren't the kind of guy I'd want to pal around with or live next door to.

There is one rather large piece of fabrication on your part, Len:

Your tale of what it is like to undergo an artillery barrage when, in fact, you never experienced being under an artillery barrage.
We have, at last count, three separate explanations from you. None of them involve your being under an artillery barrage.

There are other occasions when you've made factual errors, deliberate distortions and even some outright falsehoods.

You're being dishonest again, Len. I put the words back to show exactly what you try to pull. I've replaced the snipped material twice in this response to indicate where you've done it since our last exchange. Why pretend? The posts are archived.

> You are acting as "reply agent" for Miccolis.

That's another falsehood on your part. I'm acting as a reply agent for myself.

> Why are you
> inserting all these statements of YOUR personal dislike and Where was the term "terrible 'CHARGES' of misconduct" use by me? You've manufactured, in at least one case, an artillery tale you never experienced. In another instance you made a boast that you couldn't follow through.

> If you are reply
> agent, why cannot you include his personal dislike instead

But I'm not a reply agent. Jim is free to add personal dislike or to call you on your factual errors if he chooses to do so.

There can be no selective editing of something that is my own original statement.

Sure there's a relation. Those are two things in which you never took part--that artillery barrage and obtaining an amateur radio license.

> Are you trying to say that "amateur radio service" is > involved in artillery fire? [other than in newsgroups]

No, Leonard, I'm saying that you were never under an artillery barrage and that you are not a radio amateur despite your "Extra right out of the box" boast.

> Are you saying that ONLY radio amateurs "experience > combat?"

No, Leonard. Some of them experienced combat. You didn't.

I'll be quite happy to respond, just as soon as I see your explanation for "Spanky, Sister Nun of the Above, Kolonel Klunk, Herr Oberst" and the like. After you, Leonard.

About which thing, Len? There've been a number of things we could be discussing. Which do you mean?

Careful, Len. You throw in a few of your cutesy, insulting names and you'll be able to answer your own question.

> You and Miccolis have MANUFACTURED some mytical moral

The only person to refer to your boast as a promise is you.

> That seven-year-old statement was NEVER a Ir has been reposted here a couple of times. Why the pretense, Len?

Only you have called it a promise. It wasn't a comment, though I thought it was pretty simple at the time you made it. It was a boast.
It was bragging on your part. The only problem with your having made it is that you farted and fell. You didn't follow through.

> Miccolis
> began manufacture out of his own SPITE to "get back" > at one of his critics.

There was no manufacturing done at all, Len. Do you want to see your own words again? They've been reposted recently. If you want to stick to the word "manufacture" you'll be a bald-faced liar.

Ask me that question about why you are insulted and denigrated again, Len.

It must appear spiteful to you in that you wrote words which now embarrass you. Your "NOT DONE AT THE TIME" is simply crap. How could anyone know at the time that your boast would be an empty one?

> You wish to keep OLD arguments > going and going and going for WHAT reason?

Oh, it is probably the same reason that leads you to write snippets about Guinea-Bissau, my military service, the Foreign Service and a number of other things. Why do you think it is, Len?

I like to see you painted in your true colors, Len. I like seeing your hide on the barn wall.

Read back up the page and see the things you've written about my military service, Len. Then pick up a mirror and stare at yourself for a while.

R.R.A.P. isn't moderated, Len. I doubt we'd have seen much of your copious output it had been.

Why ask the questions if you're going to provide your own answers?

I've never attempted silencing you, Len. You've posted here for better than a decade. I've attempted to ridicule you and belittle you because you aren't involved in amateur radio and because you honk people off.

> The code test for ALL amateur radio licenses will be > gone after 23 Feb 07.

You mentioned that earlier. I was aware of that.

Then why were you writing of my military experience, Len?

Ask me again about why you are denigrated and insulted.

That's sort of like appointing oneself as advocate for something-or-other, isn't it?

If it were a democratic process, it wouldn't have passed, Len.
You know that and I know that.

Len, you've been a churl here. You have no redeeming qualities that I can find. You blow into a group about amateur radio, start regaling those present with tales of your long ago past in radio and expect folks to hang on your words. You failed to gain respect. Your windy pontifications pissed people off.

I can count as well as I ever could. Your tale has been told enough times that I can't remember the number.

I got into amateur radio. I've assisted others in getting into amateur radio.

> How is such "involvement" done?

By you? It isn't.

Well, that's certainly been one of the ways you've attempted it.

I have no need to do that, Len.

Again, that's something I've seen you attempt. Check with your sado-masochistic chum here. He can likely fill you in on that part.

> Why do you set yourself up as some kind of "king" or
> "emperor," the only one to JUDGE what others can do?

That's impossible, Len. You claim to know best how amateur radio should be regulated and you have not limited yourself to the Morse Code testing debate. Yet, you aren't a participant in amateur radio.

I didn't refer to a "YOU". I referred to an "us". Remember Jim Hampton? Remember me? There are numerous others who are radio amateurs but who do not post here.

As you mentioned earlier, 1 is a number.

No, Len, none of the places I served had anything like that. Nonetheless, a number of them had HF long haul primary communications. You're now attempting to massage things a bit. You want to add how many transmitters and how much power and how many VHF and UHF links your station had. What was your part in operations?

> Did any of "your" State stations relay messages at a

At least one of 'em did that and a lot of high speed stuff that didn't exist in your day.

Why no, Leonard. I wish to denigrate just you. You blew a bunch of smoke about your ancient history at ADA.

> Why are you so anti-Army?

Who said I was? You aren't the Army.

> Why do
> you wish to denigrate the whole Department of Defense

You aren't the Department of Defense of the United States of America.

In fact, you seem to think that the only long haul HF work I've done, other than in 43 years as a radio amateur, is with the Department of State. Much of my HF experience was during my time in the Air Force.

It certainly seemed to bother you.

A couple of weeks ago, you hadn't approved of the State Department and hadn't like a Secretary of State since George Marshall. Do you know how long ago that was?

> They are NOT "amateur radio

I didn't operate my amateur radio station from an embassy, Len.

Who wrote anything about them being military radio stations, Len?

Who wrote that, Len?

Anyone who served in them? There's just you, Len. I have more long haul HF radio experience than Leonard H. Anderson.

> Why do you

You aren't the U.S. military, Len. I don't hate the military and I don't hate you. Of the two, I dislike only you.

Yes, Len, you do. Your post (and others like it) revealed much about you.

I know what I am,

So do I, Len.

So do I, Len.

You've told the ADA tale over and over and over. You recounted what is now known as the "sphincter post" about the artillery barrage. It turned out that there was no brag or bluff and it wasn't vague. It just wasn't factual. Then there was the brag of the "Extra right out of the box".

> You see, I DO have references, third-

We have some common ground then. I have paperwork which can confirm all of my military service. I'm not afraid to post public data but I do not choose to provide it to you. There are details of my State Department career which, for reasons of National Security, I cannot share with you and would likely not share with you if I could.

I've posted some of my military experiences as well, Len. That material can be found on the web, but I'm not going to tell you where to look. Unlike you, I have not chosen to post much information about my military service here. That might look like bragging, bluffing or personal aggrandizement.

Don't bother on my account.

You noticed, did you? That's probably because I don't care. It has nothing to do with this newsgroup.

That's right. They aren't important to me or for purposes of this newsgroup.

> They are in opposition to your little personal

I can't see a thing about them which makes a hill of beans to Morse Code testing in amateur radio, to a minimum age requirement for amateur radio licensing or to me personally.

I don't have a newsgroup, Len. You've posted here for better than ten years. During that period, you've not obtained an amateur radio license and you've swayed very few readers of this group to your point of view.

> Who appointed you?

It must have been that guy who appointed you advocate for something-or-other in amateur radio.

> Besides yourself, that is. Or do you think you ARE

Don't get into that. After all, I've never claimed deity status.
You've constantly vacillated back and forth over whether I am a god or not a god. Make up your mind.

You don't honor much of anything, Len.

Your poor skills as a persuader of people?

Right. You never stopped there. You were an advocate for a minimum licensing age. You have been an insulting boor toward licensed amateur radio ops who disagreed with your views.

> I never said I was a > "participant" in licensed radio amateurism.

That's a good thing. If you'd said that, you'd have been promulgating a falsehood. It isn't "licensed radio amateurism", Leonard. "Amateur radio" is good enough.

> I have > been a HOBBYIST in radio and electronics since 1947.
> NO license was required for that.

Think of all the years you've wasted here then! You could have been spreading your joy in some electronics hobbyist newsgroup. This newsgroup deals with amateur radio.

> Why do you
> constantly look down on hobbyists who are not > "licensed?"

See above.

1. You have declared an interest in amateur radio spanning several decades.

3. You have posted to this newsgroup for better than a decade. During that period, you could have obtained at least some level of amateur radio license.

3. You made your boast of getting and "Extra right out of the box" seven years back.

>>> Amateur radio is basically a HOBBY.

The ARRL is not governed by New Englanders and it is not operated as a
"for profit" business. You're right about it being none of your concern. You are as involved in the ARRL as you are in amateur radio.

You've had more than your say, more than your fifteen minutes of fame,
Len. You have gone far beyond debate about ideas and have often delved into personalities with your personal attacks and attempts at belittling Morse Code testing advocates, Morse Code operators, radio amateurs in general and the American Radio Relay League.

You aren't "IN". You aren't "getting INTO". You've haunted an amateur Sigh all you'd like, Len. There is no unofficial amateur radio license. You're either licensed in amateur radio or you are not. Morse Code isn't the issue. There are plenty of radio amateurs who have never taken or passed a Morse Code exam.

> Some

Yeah, imagine that! To hang around an amateur radio newsgroup for longer than a decade and to never achieve an amateur radio license.

> I've been IN the larger world of ALL radio, little man.

Stow your "little man" talk, Leonard. You bluster and boast about your experience in radio but there is little indication that you've done anything in radio in recent years. Your last Ham Radio article was done what--twenty or more years back? Your empty "Extra right out of the box" boast has made you toast. Instead, you've offered up challenges like your peculiar one about a gymkhana. Would you be up for a real radio challenge, "little man"?

Considering the gallons of horse, lama, emu and DevHole jizz you currently have in your stomach, it is quite appropriate to state that you've gone jizz crazy again, b1tch.

How's DevHole's c0ck treating you? How did you like dining on his Buttnuggets this evening?

Did the topic of conversation turn to douching, b1tch? Is that when you b1tch his tip and put some of your toxic pus$y sludge on it.

I heard he bit your right nipple off in retaliation.

Do you like being an undouched toxic pus$y having b1tch?

> Your post proves that I failed to reach you in time.
I was running away from your pus$ystank. Only tards wait around for your pus$ystank to kill their neurons.

There is nothing worst that MAxwhore Pus$ystank.

Now douche, b1tch, douche.. The national guard will eventually catch up with you, MaxWhore

FCC has jurisdiction only to infractions on US soil (including US possessions and US-flagged vessels).

Infractions on foreign soil are subject to the laws of the country where they occur.

Man, I'd stay away from that for sure. Messing around with the police radio frequencies won't go over well and is sure to get you noticed. Calling 911 is going to be more helpful in the face of a true emergency, messing with a police repeater is only going to get folks confused and delay getting you and others help.

In theory, you might be legal, but in practice you'd better be sure there is a true emergency because you are surely going to have to explain it to somebody. Don't do it...

If you are thinking "what about when the phones are down and I cannot call 911?" then I'd say that disrupting the police for your own "emergency" is even more problematic because there are likely many folks in danger and your transmissions will only disrupt the whole process.

Get an old cell phone and a car charger for it. Any cell phone that has been "activated" sometime in the past can make calls to 911, even if it has no service. Failing that, get out the repeater directory and start calling on the nearest repeater you can hit.

You're a unreconstructed, walking abortion with low self-esteem and repressed childhood memories of being ass fucked by your daddy. being forced to felch horses and suck pig cock, whilst dressing up your dead mommy's crotchless panties and push-up bra, and spending your off-time (from felching and getting teabagged by homeless guys) posting obsessively about peeps with RLs on usenet.

And oh, yeah, I've seen aborted fetuses with bigger dicks than the lil wasted, useless, withered cocklet hiding and shivering in utter fear of your hourly tweezer jerking, in your piss-and-shit-stained crotchless whitie-tighties, Hey, Mark, I will if YOU will... :-)

You know as well as I (and a whole bunch of other vets, real vets) that some REMFs can't help but make themselves into great big He Rows of The War.

With a Robesin clone on the loose, what are we supposed to do? Salute them and say SIR?
Just because they have long tenure in AMATEUR
radio?

Not I. If they can't prove it, all their claims are just so much BS...that won't even grow flowers.

If you truly believe all that, then you should also believe that ham (Indeed, any) radio is an obsolete communications medium, since the world is now hard-wired.

And if the chimp can learn Morse, why can't aspiring hams? Morse is easy
at lower speeds. Anyone who can't master it at up to 15wpm surely isn't bright enought to to be trusted with his paws on the controls of a transmitter.
Why bother? I have a full amateur radio license with no morse.
Morse was removed as a requirement years ago.

The primary justification for allocation of amateur radio spectrum has always been emergency services. And in dire emergencies, operators might have to cobble together makeshift equipment. In that case, it's much simpler -- and possibly the only solution -- to build a cw transmitter than it is to come up with modulation. Hence cw has always been the ultimate disaster scenario fall-back,
and should always remain a licensing requirement.
Amateur radio is a hobby.

Otherwise, who needs hams, and why should they get any of the public radio
spectrum?
AR has way too much spectrum, but it does deserve some.

---Following was posted about two weeks ago and deserves highlighting---

To Whom It May Concern:

Let us take a little bit better look at this "unwritten policy" here, see if we can make any logical analysis about it-get the "feel" for it,
if you will.

First, there are quite a bit of threads which make up the rec.radio.amateur.??? "family of threads":
rec.radio.amateur.antenna
rec.radio.amateur.boatanchors rec.radio.amateur.digital.misc rec.radio.amateur.dx rec.radio.amateur.equipment
rec.radio.amateur.homebrew rec.radio.amateur rec.radio.amateur.misc
rec.radio.amateur.packet

Do you see one which is close to say "rec.radio.amateur.new-licensees?"
Or, "rec.radio.amateur.license .help?"
"rec.radio.amateur.recruitment?"

No, you will not find a one. Sorry thing ...

So, let us examine the existing threads, do any seem to be active in new recruitment/licence help? No, you don't see much of that either.

OK. So, examine them again, see may of these threads engaged in dialog
about how to recruit and spark interest in potential-new licensees?
No,
not much of that either ...

Hmmm, so what do we see?

We see a bunch of protective, selfish, self-serving individuals out to protect their "turf!"

Now, why don't we have more "new-blood" here? What, speak up, I can't seem to hear you?

Well, I'll make one exception, Dee, she has expressed some desire, willing to attempt and willingness towards the above.

What we really have is a bunch of these "high-mighty-self-centered-jerks" attempting to get their new club house built and escape there firmly shutting the door behind them, so as to BAR any of the above from occurring.

As of 5 Feb 07 the above is unfortunately true in here.

With a couple of exceptions (Dee and Hans Brakob of the past), and some mentions by a few "non-regulars," all the "regulars" have degenerated into their old habits of putting themselves on their self-built pedestals and sneering at others "not as good as They." That's the self-serving selfishness John speaks of. The best they can do is mouth old, trite phrases used in the 1930s. The year 2007 is over seven decades from that. Society and technology has changed remarkably from that old time.

Most of these "old regulars" love to heap abuse on me, a person who has been IN "radio" since 1952 but has "failed" to get an amateur radio license. [my Commercial First 'Phone granted in 1956 is somehow cast aside in their personal vendettas and vitriol] Hey, no sweat, I've heard all of that acidity long before. Doesn't faze me.

I'm still undecided on whether or not to take advantage of the NO-CODE-TEST regulations coming up. Of what advantage would it be? For me or anyone not licensed as an amateur? Our society is fully engaged in using "radio" in many (and remarkable) ways, usually without any need for an amateur license. What "need" is it? Belonging to an "exclusive community?" Dozens of ways to do that anywhere in this country. To belong to a "proud heritage" of pioneers? Sorry, but the vast majority of actual radio pioneering was done by the professionals, the entrepreneurs, the academics, the folks in the electronics industry. Perhaps to be able to "sign" an amateur station call sign behind their name? That's a misuse of honors, a copy-catting of pretend significance, of puffing out enlarged egos. Passing any amateur radio test is NOT any sort of academic achievement.

If you can't get into the electronics industry or academia, then the Masons, Shriners, Elks or Moose or similar fraternal orders can satisfy "belonging to a 'proud tradition of fraternalism'" and they probably have a nice bar in their local hang-out. If you happen to just LIKE radio-electronics then it is best NOT ever to mention that; olde-tymers don't want to hear "fun" expressed unless it is to THEIR "standards" of having fun.

The ITU treaty covers infractions over foreign soil.

why do I think you go for it?

well it isn't that hard to do always something coming along the pike fewer rules (although some of them are bizzare) stoping you from fiddling with and using

you have done EME as I recal on haevy comercail gear I have done eme first on voice on somebody leses sation then just barely on a staion of my own design and asmebly the 2 experences are the same Len they just are not wether this will apeal all that much to you I honestly don't know, and frankly neither do you till you try another thing being ham would give you a chance to pass on YOUR knowledge to other hams after most of the current tech were taught not by these old pomous extras but by fellow tech with a bit more experence. you would have a lot to offer. I know esp with my wife becuase I can see her do I get to rcapture thioose same early learning experences after a fashion

another thing you have spent time and effort seeing that the spectrum the public has entrusted to us the ARS is being made use of properly

the costs these days are not high a basic dc to daylight rig is less than most new pcs a stat rig (thinking the kenwood in maybe 2 pc or smaler big screentv in cost

it is also something you can pick up put down as needed

very little to lose maybe something t gain Id say go for it

Some might do that.

But, by definition, if a person intentionally makes an untrue statement, intending to deceive, that person is telling a lie.

So what you are saying is that Len tells lies in order to "lure"
others.

Myself, I have never referred to anyone here as a liar, nor their statements as lies. Mistakes or errors, yes, but not lies.

> Factual errors according to whom?

According to objective reality.

> With reference to what source?

Objective sources.

> In other words, who judges what is fact and what is fiction?

Reality does that.

For example, suppose someone stated that the distance from Tokyo,
Japan, to Vladivostok, Russia, was 500 miles.

That statement could be checked against paper maps, atlases, online mapping resources, etc.

It turns out that the actual distance between those cities is more than 660 miles. Objective reality shows that the person who stated "500 miles" made a factual error. A mistake.

See how easy that is? It's not a matter of belief or opinion, but of objective reality.

> You wouldn't happen to have a total handy, would you?

Not handy ;-)

"There's a flaw in your cunning plan, Baldrick!"

Although the number of Len's factual errors here is considerable, it is by no means beyond my capabilities to provide a total, and specifics.

However, that would be counterproductive.

Because as soon as I did so, you would say that I had taken the lure and verified your claim of "Every time - without fail!"

IOW, you would say that once I provide details of a factual error made by Len, it is no longer a factual error that I let pass, and instead became one more "lure" that I went after.

Of course some might say that such reasoning is a load of dingo's kidneys, but I doubt that would convince you.

So the only way for me to prove that your claim of "Every time - without fail!" is false, is for me to leave at least some of Len's factual errors alone. Which I have already done.

Now of course someone else could come along and point out one or more of Len's factual errors here, and then show that I had left those error(s) alone.

But then you could claim that the reason I left those error(s) alone was that I had not identified it/them as factual error(s) in the first place.

And again, some might say that such reasoning is a load of dingo's kidneys, but I doubt that would convince you.

> >Therefore, your claim of Which it has.

If I were to fall for your cunning plan, you would immediately disqualify any specific example I would give, by employing the discussion listed above.

He certainly gets upset enough over them. A mature person would simply accept the corrections and say thank you to the person who pointed out the factual error.

I participate in several moderated email reflectors. They work and are lots of fun.

That really bothers him.

Nope.

Len doesn't always post misinformation. Some of what he writes is actually true!

And it is you, not I, that says his factual errors are intentional.

You're saying it's magic if Len tells the truth here? That it is more logical to think that Len is telling untruths than to think that he is Interesting.

I'd bet that this radio is illegal for sale in the US as well given

...except that your pronouncement isn't true. There are precious few potential radio amateurs appearing here. You have haunted this newsgroup for over a decade without bothering to take an amateur radio licensing exam, much less to pass one. You aren't a new amateur radio op and you aren't likely to become one. Your posting style is full of insults and rudeness. As you have found, you reap what you sow.

You aren't a licensed radio amateur. Your posts are certainly self-serving. I've never heard of self-serving selfishness.

Your boast of getting that "Extra right out of the box" is itself seven years old. Your first post to this newsgroup took place over ten years ago.

No kidding, Len? Do you think that things that represent societal norms are better now than they were decades ago?

> Most of these "old regulars" love to heap abuse on

You failed to mention your behavior here--the behavior which allows you to heap abuse on others without expecting it in return.

In regard to your failure to achieve an amateur radio license, you declared an interest in amateur radio spanning decades. You've posted to an amateur radio interest newsgroup for better than a decade. You've boasted that you would obtain the highest class U.S. amateur radio license "right out of the box" in a statement made seven years ago. Have you acted on obtaining that or any amateur radio license?

> [my Commercial First 'Phone granted in 1956 is somehow

Your commercial First Phone ticket is not an amateur radio license. This is not a commercial radio newsgroup. A commercial license is "cast aside" by the FCC with regard to the obtaining of an amateur radio license. You would have to meet the same amateur radio licensing requirements as anyone else before you'd be issued an amateur license.

> I'm still undecided on whether or not to take > advantage of the NO-CODE-TEST regulations coming

I'll try to make this as uncomplicated as I can, Len:
You would be able to operate an amateur radio station in the amateur bands.

> For me or anyone not licensed as an amateur?

Your non-sentence aside, the result would be the same for you as for anyone else.

> Our society is > fully engaged in using "radio" in many (and > remarkable) ways, usually without any need for an > amateur license.

As interesting as I find your statement, one who expresses interest in amateur radio, haunts an amateur radio newsgroup and boast that he is going to get the top license immediately must have found a reason to obtain an amateur radio license.

> What "need" is it?

Why not tell us what you perceived your need to be?

> Belonging to
> an "exclusive community?" Dozens of ways to do

You could live in a gated community with country club privileges. You could wear Gucci loafers and sip Campari in an ultra-expensive night spot. You cold live in an area which fights tooth and nail to prevent zoning changes which would change the neighborhood or you could belong to that very exclusive group of newsgroup crackpots which plagues groups in which it does not participate.

> To belong to a

It isn't up to you to worry over someone who uses his amateur radio callsign, Len. You aren't involved. Your plaintive cries over pretend significance and enlarged egos are those of an outsider shouting, "but look at what I've done!"

All of those options are open to you, Len. If that is your object, join one of those organizations. They likely have a nice, warm lodge hall where you might be accepted as one of the gang. By the way, Shriners are Masons.

> If you happen to just LIKE radio-electronics then it

You are able to have all of the fun you are capable of having by tinkering with electronics. That isn't amateur radio, but why let that bother you? Lots of folks who aren't radio amateurs enjoy electronics. Amateur radio may not be the thing for you.

The US Government tends to frown on US citizens providing material support to any side of a civil war that is occurring in a foreign country unless of course such support is part of a CIA sponsored covert aid program. A citizen operating outside the bounds of US policy might be construed as violating US neutrality laws.

The shards of mental coat hanger embedded in your skull lets the world know that you dead c*nt momma at least tried to do the right thing and abort you. But teh c*nt was too f*cking retared to know how to properly perform a coat hanger abortion and now th world is stuck with your pathetic filthy toxic c*ntiness..

Your dad was wise to ignore your pleas and to continue to rip your anu$ apart. Your dad was wise to force you to gag on lama c0ck when he took your little c*nty as$ to the zoo.

He was wise to make you felch his jizz out of your momma. And I was glad to hear that when you murdered your c*nty momma you dad f*cked the corpse of its as$ and made you felch out the deposits one last time.

Justice, b1tch , justice.

The ARRL did it...

By the way, you've been a bit out of touch with digital radio broadcasting. Digital radio has been going on in HF bands for about 4 years now...doing what many olde-tymers said was "impossible." Then you've forgotten about the satellite downlinks for digital radio.

Now be nice to people like Scheissman. He can't really help the fact that he rode the short bus as a kid. When it is a family tradition to be like that, it is sad but obvious that a lot of inbreeding occurred in West Virginia.

Maybe or maybe not. In either case, FCC has no jurisdiction to prosecute "neutrality laws".

Then, get the guy convicted of a crime and then complain to the FCC about his license... The FCC is not in the business of enforcing all the laws of the US, just the ones they wrote.

Incorrect, faulty, mistaken. Your whole reply is a REAFFIRMATION of what I wrote. :-)

>There are precious few >potential radio amateurs appearing here.

Incorrect, faulty, mistaken...except for "precious."

The standout in here was Val Germann of Missouri, making "precious" noises about morse code. Germann has yet to upgrade from Tech.

"Precious" can be applied to a pair of cute 4-year-olds who each got an amateur radio license in 1998.

>You have haunted this >newsgroup for over a decade without bothering to take an amateur radio >licensing exam, much less to pass one.

A newsgroup is NOT amateur radio. No "license" is needed to either read or post in a newsgroup.

You have NO AUTHORITY to demand all in here be licensed
for anything.

>You aren't a new amateur radio
>op and you aren't likely to become one.

I haven't been a "new" radio operator since 1953.

I was granted a COMMERCIAL radio operator license 50 years ago...it is still on record although the FCC modified all three Radiotelephone Operator classes into on General class about 1985. Look it up in the FCC ULS if you must.

You cannot foretell the future. No human has proven to be prescient. What you blurt out is nothing but a rude and insulting remark.

>Your posting style is full of insults and rudeness.

Incorrect. I am direct, sometimes terse, and do not back down from rude, insulting control-freaks who love not radio but just to shove others around.

>As you have found, you reap what you sow.

The only thing I've sown is some grass seed. That came up nicely. The California Pocket Gophers in this neighbor-hood attempted to eat it from below. They were gassed.

The only "sow" encountered in the last decade have been some transgendered porcine types who thought they were gods of radio and attempted pushing many of us NCTA around.

>> That's the self-serving selfishness John >> speaks of.
>You aren't a licensed radio amateur.

Quite true. I am a LICENSED COMMERCIAL (professional) radio operator. The FCC said I was.

Everyone who does not have an amateur radio license is not licensed in the amateur radio service. Of course. Obvious. You are being very redundant. As well as rotund. Going in circles, nowhere.

>Your posts are certainly self-serving.

No. My computer(s) have no AI capability. They won't serve me anything. All they do is act like computers.

>I've never heard of self-serving selfishness.

That was a FIGURE OF SPEECH, Herr Pedant. Everytime I use a figure of speech, you pedant in your pants.

>> The best they can do is mouth old, trite phrases used in the 1930s.

I do not know of this "Stephen Wright." For what it is worth, I am also a paid joke writer selling only ORIGINAL material. Would you like to see my AFTRA card?

>Your boast of getting that "Extra right out of the box" is itself seven >years old. Your first post to this newsgroup took place over ten years >ago.

Irrelevant. I did not "boast" anything. That is your FABRICATION.

My first post in any computer-modem venue took place in the first week of December, 1984. That was 22 years ago (and a fraction).

In the period of 7 years, one can conceive a child, teach it all about morse code and English language comprehension sufficient to score correct written answers on an amateur radio test, get their picture published by the ARRL, then enter kindergarten. Have you done this? Has Miccolis done this?

Have you EVER treated a human being in a friendly manner without ordering them around? There is "precious" little evidence of that in here...other than with a few like-minded morse-inflated ego types.

>You failed to mention your behavior here--the behavior which allows you >to heap abuse on others without expecting it in return.

Incorrect, Mistaken, False. You do not understand true debate and the exchange of opinions. You don't because you've never attempted to do that. What you EXPECT is gratuitous "congratulations" and the mistaken notion of innate "respect" you think is owed you...just because you once passed the highest-rate morse code exam and some extra questions.

I am quite used to your type of personality, one of the self-inflated ego-driven variety. I've been immersed in social interaction with your kind all of my adult life.
I've survived none the worse for wear...yet you are the bitter fabricator, the sore loser personified over a very recent federal agency decision and ruling.

>In regard to your failure to achieve an amateur radio license, you >declared an interest in amateur radio spanning decades.

Incorrect, Mistaken, Faulty. YOU fabricated some specialized "interest" out of my (several) statements expressing an interest in radio-electronics.

I've explained of how my interest in radio came about as an adult: A fortuitous assignment to a large HF communications station while in the US Army. None of that involved "amateur radio."

>You've posted >to an amateur radio interest newsgroup for better than a decade.

I've written and edited in an amateur radio magazine over a decade before that. I've written letters on the advocacy of eliminating the morse code test. My advocacy in this newsgroup has been to eliminate the code test for an amateur radio license. That was stated out in the open in here during that whole decade. I have several friends who have been licensed radio amateurs for much longer than a decade, much longer than several decades.

>You've >boasted that you would obtain the highest class U.S. amateur radio >license "right out of the box" in a statement made seven years ago.

I have not "BOASTED." That is your fabrication. I made a statement that I "could" based on the amateur radio written tests of that time.

If all you have to attempt discrediting me is some FABRICATIONS, then

>Have you acted on obtaining that or any amateur radio license?

I am not an actor and don't play one on TV. I've only done voice-overs. Would you like to see my AFTRA card? :-)

>> [my Commercial First 'Phone granted in 1956 is somehow

>Your commercial First Phone ticket is not an amateur radio license.

I've never said it was anything but a "First Class Radiotelephone (Commercial) Radio Operator License" to quote the FCC on my first certificate of that, or the colloquial "First 'Phone."

>This is not a commercial radio newsgroup.

Yet all can see the usual subliminal ads for the ARRL in the Believers' evangelical parroting of their words and phrases. [St. Hiram be praised]

>A commercial license is "cast >aside" by the FCC with regard to the obtaining of an amateur radio >license.

The FCC has NEVER "cast aside" my First 'Phone nor subsequent GROL. It is still in the FCC URL records and still current.

The requirements for an amateur radio license are all explained in Title 47 C.F.R. Part 97.501 and following.

The requirements for commercial radio operator licenses are given in regulations of Title 47 C.F.R.
Part 13. Do you understand these instructions as they have been explained to you? If not, the court will appoint an attorney to assist you.

>You would have to meet the same amateur radio licensing >requirements as anyone else before you'd be issued an amateur license.

I've not said anything to the contrary. The LAW is quite clear enough on the issue of civil US radio.
You seem confused as to the differences of LAW and your imaginings.

YOU are NOT any law official. You are merely officious.

>I'll try to make this as uncomplicated as I can, Len:
>You would be able to operate an amateur radio station in the amateur bands.

I am quite able to "operate an amateur radio station."
With or without a license. You failed (once more) to make your point that it would be ILLEGAL to operate
AS IF one were a licensed radio amateur if no US amateur radio license had been granted to that operator.

Any radio operator license does NOT automatically ENABLE anyone to "operate an amateur radio station."
ABILITY of anyone to "operate an amateur radio station" has nothing at all to do with licensing. The license is merely an AUTHORIZATION by the US federal government to operate. Do you understand the definition as it has been explained to you? If not, the court will appoint a dictionary to assist you.

As they said in the TV control booth, "Take Black."
In this case "Black's Law Dictionary." :-)

>As interesting as I find your statement, one who expresses interest in >amateur radio, haunts an amateur radio newsgroup and boast that he is >going to get the top license immediately must have found a reason to >obtain an amateur radio license.

No "BOAST" was ever made. I do not "HAUNT." I may PLAY at being a ghost on Halloween...and have. Boooo!

I "express an interest" in ALL radio. So much so that I made electronics and radio a life career early-on, despite having an aptitude for (called "talent") and experience IN commercial illustration ("art" where the artist draws/paints/inks things as they really are).

Why do YOU attempt constant "haunting" of anyone who does not agree with your mighty claims and boasts of "radio operation" to/from faraway lands?

>Why not tell us what you perceived your need to be?

Why indeed? Have you understood my previous explanations as I've explained them to you? If not, the court will appoint a psychiatrist to assist and analyze you.

>You could live in a gated community with country club privileges.

I live (in the southern house) back-yard to back-yard with a gated community called "Montelena." 44 homes built on 15 acres of what was undeveloped wilderness.
That community has NO "country club" there.

>You >could wear Gucci loafers and sip Campari in an ultra-expensive night >spot.

? Is that one of your "requirements" for amateur radio?

Strange. Strange.

>You cold live in an area which fights tooth and nail to prevent >zoning changes which would change the neighborhood or you could belong >to that very exclusive group of newsgroup crackpots which plagues groups >in which it does not participate.

Are you suffering from a plague? See medical assistance as soon as possible!

Are you suffering from plaque? Seek dental assistance as soon as possible.

"Fighting tooth and nail?" No nails were used in the attempt to change a local zoning board ruling, just the democratic processes of the neighborhood getting together (also meeting at the local church), petitioning, then speaking before the zoning commission in public. Neither were "teeth" involved.
See your dentist regularly for better oral hygience. That will help keep your dentures in place when you snarl and grimace so much. Especially when you boil over and shout.

That SINGLE LOCAL zoning incident resulted in a change from residential single-family homes to residential multiple family (apartments, condos, etc) homes. The gated community you and Miccolis refer to is the "Montelena" I mentioned above...which has only single-family homes now. Nothing whatsoever in that alleged "tooth and nail" debate involved any "radio" subjects, not even TV cable or satellite down-link, certainly not amateur radio antenna installations.

Now, if your parroting Miccolis MANUFACTURED moral-ethical "fault" would stop we might all learn to get along. That was NOT a "radio" issue of any kind. It had absolutely NOTHING to do with "radio," either amateur or commercial. Do you understand those explanations as they have been given you?

If not the court will appoint a two-by-four to lay across your head at no cost to you.

>Then you might have misdirected your haunting of newsgroups.

Tsk. You don't have a ghost of a chance of understanding anything but "professional amateurism," do you? :-)

>It isn't up to you to worry over someone who uses his amateur radio >callsign, Len.

NO "worrying" was done. :-) A high degree of persistence in advocacy of eliminating the morse code test from license testing done over a period greater than two decades was done. That was just a POLITICAL matter that was finally settled by FCC 06-178 released on 15 Dec 06.
Do you understand those explanations as they've been explained to you? If not the court will appoint someone of sound mind to attempt making you understand.

>You aren't involved.

Yes, I was quite involved. FCC 06-178 resulted on the part of thousands who "involved" themselves in making their lawful comments to the US federal government.
The code test for any class amateur radio license in the USA will be GONE very soon. Do you understand FCC Reports and Orders as they've been explained to you?
If not, the court will appoint a federal attorney to explain the Consitution of the US and basic civics to you.

>Your plaintive cries over pretend >significance and enlarged egos are those of an outsider shouting, "but >look at what I've done!"

I've never worked Frenchmen out of band. I've never had to "synchronize teleprinters" by means of on-off keying morse code in the 1980s. I've never served in the State Department and bragged about BEING "DX."

Your continuing PRETENSE at being a near-equivalent god of radio through amateurism has been duly noted. By all readers of this newsgroup.

>You are able to have all of the fun you are capable of having by >tinkering with electronics.

"Tinkering?" :-) A working career that included duties of responsible project engineer is just "tinkering?!?" :-)

>That isn't amateur radio, but why let that >bother you?

"Amateur" is a regulatory definition of one who engages in an activity WITHOUT monetary compensation. That is ALSO the definition of a HOBBY. HOBBY.

LICENSED amateur radio is what you should have written.
LICENSED, AUTHORIZED by the only civil radio regulatory agency of the United States government. Have you understood the definitions as they were explained to you?
If not, the court may appoint a bailiff to place you under arrest until medical science has come up with an explanation for your serious mental confusion.

>Lots of folks who aren't radio amateurs enjoy electronics.

...and you think ALL of them are monetarily compensated if they do not have federal authorization to transmit RF on certain bands with certain modulation modes according to federal regulations? Not so.

See? That is your extreme CONFUSION. You mistakenly label "radio amateurs" as ONLY the "licensed." Your EGO has given way to logic and reason...but, then, everyone has already seen that...

My end-of-message IDENTIFICATION is merely an E-MAIL FORWARDING ALIAS. See the header "From" line. My professional association (IEEE, 34 years) provides that forwarding alias free of charge to all IEEE Members. That one-way forwarding alias includes some "spam" filtering as an extra "filter" to remove unwanted advertising e-mail. Such a forwarding alias in little different than that used by the ARRL for amateur radio members, conveying no more significance than any other forwarding alias.

Do you understand this e-mail forwarding definition as it has been explained to you? If not, the court will appoint yet another dead horse for you to beat upon.

My statement is correct. N2EY has never been other than civilized with reply to him.

My statement is correct. The overwhelming majority of posters to this

You should be happy for him.

The word "precious" may be applied to numerous things.

That's correct. This particular newsgroup deals with amateur radio.

Lucky for you.

I've never made a demand that you obtain an amateur radio license. In fact, I much prefer that you didn't.

Precisely. You have yet to become a radio amateur. When and if you ever obtain such a license, you'll be a new amateur radio op.

I don't care about it, Len. It isn't an amateur radio license.
In amateur radio, it qualifies you for nothing.

I predict that you will never obtain an amateur radio license during your lifetime. Now let's sit back and see if I've accurately predicted the future.

You're the biggest control freak of all, Len. You want to control regulations in something in which you play no part. Your rudeness under a variety of posting names is archived.

None of that has anything to do with your boast of getting the "Extra

Hang on, Len....I'm looking around in your initial post. Nope, I've looked high and low for it. You failed to mention your behavior.

I think you're the individual who doesn't understand it. True debate does not involve names like "Sister Nun of the Above", "you little USMC Feldwebel", "little man", "Herr Oberst" and the the like.

You've never attempted that, Len. You've been an overbearing and

I expect civilized behavior from an elderly gentleman, not insults being

I feel entitled to civilized behavior from you. You're a big let down, Len.

You discount your own self-importance and attempt to tranfer that behavior to those who know more about something than you. In this case, that something is amateur radio. You're a Leonard-come-lately.

I'm confused by your writing, Len. Am I the sore loser personified or

Yes, it was. Then you went on to demonstrate through your behavior, that your self-appointed advocacy was about much, much more. It was about minimum age requirements for an amateur radio license and it was about insulting the ARRL and insulting radio amateurs who have never posted to this newsgroup as well as those posters who disagreed with your stance on a number of issues.

Your dozens of ways to belong to an exclusive community didn't mention radio or amateur radio. You simply snipped your own comment and began drifting. I put your statement back so others could note your attempt.

Jim provided a perfectly valid analogy. You didn't like it a single bit. You'd have betters odds of getting along if you changed your behavior and acted like an adult.

No, it didn't. It didn't have to have anything to do with radio to be a valid analogy. Did I mention that you didn't like it one little bit?

You're drifting again, Leonard. What has that to do with your comments about how radio amateurs use their callsigns?

What has that to do with how radio amateurs choose to use their

I'm still trying to figure out how they relate to amateur radio ops using their callsigns.

Precisely. That never stopped you from telling me what my job was or how I should have done it.

I never bragged about being DX either, Len. I was DX during six different foreign postings. I didn't boast that I was going to be DX and then not follow through. See the difference?

You don't speak for all readers of this newsgroup. I've never pretended to be a god of radio or even a near-equivalent of a god of radio.
In fact, I've corrected you a number of times. You've been confused a number of times, first saying that I was a god of radio then stating that I'm not a god of radio. Now we have you issuing a statement that I have a pretense of being a near-equivalent through amateurism.

You've never been able to make up your mind.

working career.

If the word "radio" doesn't appear, how is it a regulatory definition?

What does the FCC say amateur radio is, Len? I've asked you three times, but you don't seem to know how to respond.

Amateur radio is amateur radio, Len. There is no need to add the word
"licensed". There is no other kind of amateur radio.

I understand what an amateur radio license is, Len. You don't have one.

Why no, Len, I don't think that. They aren't called radio amateurs.
An interest in electronics doesn't make one an amateur radio op.

No, Len, I didn't write that. The confusion seems to be in the Anderson home comm center--where the same message was transmitted twice.

But, according to your logic, the use of such a callsign by a radio amateur for purposes other than to identify an amateur radio station would be "a misuse of honors or a copycatting of pretend significance."

Your problem is much deeper. However, it MIGHT be

In here I'm not in the presence of gods, only some cranky "superior" wannabes trying to push others around.

So, you still believe that pre-kindergarten 4-year-olds have sufficient English comprehension to take and pass written test elements for an amateur radio license? :-)

Good luck on that one, now.

>> A newsgroup is NOT amateur radio.
>That's correct. This particular newsgroup deals with amateur radio.

So do several other newsgroups. However, NONE of them seem to be concerned with getting anyone licensed in the amateur radio service of the United States. That was the point of "John Smith I" first posting in this thread.

So far, all that seems to be "dealt" is a bunch of middle-school-minded macho adolescents busy tossing filth and sexual innuendo around...or some olde-tyme "superiority" fossils busy berating others and/or trying to push others
around.

On the whole, this newsgroup doesn't seem to be dealing at all well with amateur radio.

>> You have NO AUTHORITY to demand all in here be licensed
>> for anything.
>I've never made a demand that you obtain an amateur radio license.

That's obviously INCORRECT. YOU have wasted much memory space with constant sniping, back-biting, arrogant posturing (mostly on your alleged "superiority"), and constant fabrication of others' "faults" which were no faults, only differences of opinion.

>In fact, I much prefer that you didn't.

You seem to desire that in ALL your newsgroup opponents.

Is that the very model of modern morseman amateur? To restrict the PUBLIC airways of anyone but your own cozy little clique of hive-mind hammatures? Yes, it does appear to be so! :-)

>Precisely. You have yet to become a radio amateur. When and if you >ever obtain such a license, you'll be a new amateur radio op.

You are CONSTANTLY dwelling on "new ops" as if that were some kind of pejorative. Why? Is it because the FCC will no longer have morse code testing as a necessity to become a licensed radio amateur? Or are those your own personal issues which might be alleviated by Anger Management counseling?

Maybe it is some kind of EGO thing, one of your imagining
you are always "superior" to those YOU consider "inferior?"
Oh, my, it seems like you have MANY personal issues!

>I don't care about it, Len. It isn't an amateur radio license.
>In amateur radio, it qualifies you for nothing.

INCORRECT. MISTAKE. FAULTY. A commercial radio operator license enables any grantee to operate a transmitter on MORE of the EM spectrum, using MORE modes than are allocated to radio amateurs. That involves radio technologies which have yet to be adapted by the "amateur community."

By human-made LAW at the federal level, licensed amateurs are restricted to LAW-specified frequency bands and only certain, specified modes of operation and modulation. Radio amateurs cannot broadcast, cannot get monetary compensation for their radio activies (some rare exceptions such as in Part 97.113 (d)), cannot permit anyone but a licensed control operator to operate their (or other amateur) station transmitters. Note the use of "human-made" as a descriptor. The LAW came into being as a political thing, not some divine edict in which (licensed) radio amateurs are somehow "superior" to all others. What was made by humans can be deleted by humans. FCC 06-178 is as lawful as any other US amateur radio service regulation and it has deleted your cherished code test.

I could go on and on about my technical-operational back-ground but you would simply dismiss it in your usual arrogant "superior" manner as if it were "nothing." You just did that above. This only demonstrates your spiteful selfish desire to be some kind of "superior" over others, amply demonstrated in here for years.

Now how do you think that looks to those who are really new to radio, any kind of radio? Do you think they will worship you at your feet AS IF you were some god of radio? Do you think it makes them proud just to be in the same newsgroup with you? If you do, then you've got a really bad case of Superiority Complex all mixed up with an even larger Inferiority Complex. A complex confusion.

>I predict that you will never obtain an amateur radio license during >your lifetime.

It's irrelevant as to whatever I do. If you keep on treating me as something worse than dirt, then others will think that you will treat them as dirt, or worse. They will get the (demonstratably correct) idea that ALL olde-tyme morsemen are elite snobs looking down on "lesser beings." NOT a good attitude.

Your constant prodding, poking, sneering, and general un-wholesome behavior about "newbies" and "neophytes" makes it clear that YOUR motivation is merely to make fun of, to ridicule and demean all your newsgroup opponents. You are trying to "set up" some kind of future commentary. That's so predictable that you might as well make graphics lighted by neon. For example, in my case, three possible courses of your future action:

1. I take no action towards getting an amateur radio license: No change in your attitude, the same manufactured "faults" you've been expressing all along, a constant barrage of snide snarly remarks about "long interest" and "no action."

2. I try testing and fail any element: Accusations of "stupdity," "inability to be as good as four-year-olds," and general cat-calling of a most uncivil nature. A general set of uncomplimentary remarks including charges of an "age" nature.

3. I try and succeed: Modified accusations, now along the lines of snide, snarly, berating comments about "why didn't I do that 'sooner?'" That would be followed by a "lecture" of how I was "supposed to have gotten an amateur license
'first'!"

For any of the three possible scenarios I would proceed on my own, for me, NOT on any remarks from a suspected insane individual such as yourself.

>You're the biggest control freak of all, Len. You want to control >regulations in something in which you play no part.

My advocacy of eliminating the code test was about GETTING INTO amateur radio. The FCC did eliminate that code test effect 23 Feb 07. Thousands commented to the FCC about eliminating that code test, including myself. There is NO LAW WHATSOEVER that restricted such commentary to ONLY licensed persons in a particular civil radio service.

Do YOU spend all your time GETTING INTO amateur radio through taking morse code tests? I don't think so.
YOU spend an inordinate amount of time trying to accuse others of pushing YOU around! Oh, my, who could EVER DARE push Heil around?!? Why you would just fabricate some "faults" of theirs and try to get others to believe that!

>You've told us about the "sow" you've eaten in recent months.

INCORRECT. The FDA does not require labeling of ham
as to the gender of the animal butchered and packed.

A definition of ham: "The butchered meat of swine."

>You're still at the starting line, Len.

IMPOSSIBLE. The only "starting line" in radio happened in either Switzerland of 1895 or Italy of 1896, both done by Guglielmo Marconi. That is historical fact. The only dispute there is Marconi's experiments (few records were kept) in Switzerland in 1895. Popov in Russia demonstrated radio as a communications medium in 1896.

"Amateur radio" in the USA was legalized in 1912 with the first US radio regulating agency. That defined "amateur" as opposed to commercial or professional radio. The FCC was created by an Act of Congress in 1934.

I was a radio-electronics hobbyist in 1947, became a military-professional in HF radio in 1953, was granted a commercial radio operator license in 1956, was given first radio engineering design responsibility in 1962. Is that your quaint "superior" arrogance in saying I was NOT at ANY "starting line" in the past?

Is amateur radio some kind of unique physics phenomenon that is totally unlike all other radio? It isn't. Why do you persist in trying to say that? You must be INSANE.

I am not licensed to counsel the INSANE. While I enjoy fruitcake, you are not of good taste. Get your own handlers. All the civil radio services will continue as they have been doing regardless of what you spout in here.

Yeah, I'm aware of that, but it is rice box technology. I know of no hams that have made homebrew digital transmitters; you have to buy them from kenwood etc, thus the credit for the technology must be given to the commerical manufacturers with no contribution from amateur radio licensees other than for field testing it.

Of course I never thought about satellite downlinks because so few of us use them. I know that what we do use is ancient technology compared to commercial compressed digital; we only transmit staellite in analog format and it is rather a waste of time/money.

How can one get a heart attack climbing mountains in molehills?

It is quite impossible for a mountain to exist in a molehill.

This is what my high school grammar teacher called a "mixed metaphor".
Remember that? Mixed metaphors are to be avoided as they tend not to make any sense and fail to provide the irony intended.

How were your grades in grammar claas?

No, I merely intended to open a discussion on topic within the ng topic(radio.policy). You on ther hand tend to post off-topic most of the time. I am sure my position is correct and I see very little discourse on the other side that is actually well thought out. It seems like you and K0HB are saying "You are wrong because it doesn't affect the FCC"...FCC and FBI are enforcement arms of the federal government. It makes no difference who does the actual enforcing. The FBI could take actiom against obscenity being transmitted over the radio spectrum but so could the FCC.

If it involves illegal transmission by a US citizen or resident of electromagnetic waves anywhere, between 3000Hz and light waves, it is within the FCC's scope to take action.

True, they do have juriosdiction over "telecom" (telephone). They also have jurisdiction over RF, which is what I was referring to.

If the action violates US law and occured on US soil, the FCC can take action.

If not, the foreign government can prosecute if the offender is on their soil, or if not and there is a treaty, ask the US for extradition of the offender, none of which would involve the FCC.

The FCC has no jurisdiction over anything that happens on foreign soil.

The FCC could take action after the person was convicted by a foreign government under the various character clauses.

On more than one occasion, shortwave pirate broadcasters have taken their radio equipment onto to a ship, sailed out to international waters and transmitted. In every case, when the ship returned to USA waters, the FCC seized their equipment and prosecuted the pirate broadcasters.

The offenses did not occur on USA territory.

The FCC acted in accordance with treaties signed by the USA and other ITU members.

Not hardly.

What was the registry of the ships?

If US, US law applies, if not it depends on existing treaties.

Plus there is a big difference between international waters and being inside the borders of a foreign nation.

The FCC isn't the world police over anything.

Ship's registry doesn't matter but I doubt that any of them were US flag vessels.

Not at all.

Bank robbery is under the jurisdiction of the FBI in the US.

If a US citizen commits bank robbery in twobitestan and returns to the US, the FBI will only get involved upon the request of the twobitestan government if there are appropriate treaties and action is initiated by the twobitestan government.

And ship's registry matters a lot while in international waters.

US law is not preeminent over any other government's laws on foreign soil.

If it were, we wouldn't have US citizens punished under foreign law on foreign soil for acts that are legal under US law.

You should really rethink your position. A couple of people here have attempted to steer you in the right direction. The FCC has no jurisdiction in a foreign land.

A "rice box" is not characteristic of an ethnic slur. I am merely celebrating ethnic diversity, acknolwledging the superiority of their contributions to the amateur service when compared to those of, say, kb9rqz.

OK, so I can sail out of New York harbor in a Panamanian flagged vessel and sail past the 250 mile limit and transmit whatever I want, say at 500,000W, as a pirate with no call sign, without fear of retribution from the FCC when I return to New York harbor, under the auspices that FCC has no authority over my transmissions in international waters, even though I am in complete violation of USA ITU treaty agreements? If this were actually legal, do you realize how many stations would be doing exactly that?

newsgroup if you feel that it is needed.

Excuse me, Leonard. Where are the demands. You specifically wrote

Your faults really are faults.

That has nothing to do with it. All Morse Code tested amateur radio licensees were new when they first obtained a license. All non-Morse Code tested ops will be new when they are first licensed.

I'm not angry, Len. I've stated a fact. Every radio amateur was new at

I'm superior to some in certain areas. I'm inferior to others.

Do you keep forgetting that we're discussing your commercial ticket in an amateur radio newsgroup? It doesn't count for squat in obtaining an amateur radio license. It doesn't give you any amateur radio privileges.

> By human-made LAW at the federal level, licensed amateurs Right. You aren't authorized to operate an amateur radio station in those places.

Other than Todd O'What's-his-face and the former holder of the K1MAN callsign, what radio amateur is spending his time thinking that he's a broadcaster? What are you going on about?

That doesn't change anything for you, Len. You're still on the outside, looking in. When it comes to amateur radio, all licensed ops are your superiors.

> I could go on and on about my technical-operational back> ground...

And you have--often.

> ...but you would simply dismiss it in your usual

It isn't anything to me. It isn't anything to the FCC. They still expect you to pass all the exams required for a particular class of license if you are to be issued one. That's the only way open to you.

> just did that above.

Sure, I did. The commercial license you keep bringing up doesn't do anything toward getting you an amateur radio license.

> This only demonstrates your spiteful > selfish desire to be some kind of "superior" over others,

Like I said, Len, I don't care if you ever obtain an amateur ticket. You can sulk and pout to the end of your days. I really don't care.

> Now how do you think that looks to those who are really > new to radio, any kind of radio?

Let me make it clear to anyone who is a potential new ham right now:

Do it now. Take the test now. If you want to become a radio amateur, don't wait, don't waste precious years waffling. Learn the material and get that license. The sooner you take and pass the exam, the sooner you can enjoy all that amateur radio has to offer. You don't need some self-appointed advocate. You don't need to read this newsgroup. Just order the study material and get to work on them.

There, Len, that should clear things up for the potential licensees you might happen upon r.r.a.p. Don't misunderstand. I didn't mean the above for you. You may spend the balance of your days on the sideline.

> Do you think they will > worship you at your feet AS IF you were some god of radio?

What is this radio god fetish you have?

I don't spend my days wondering or worrying if some potential new ham is going to be proud of me.

seem to behave himself.

There's one of your mistakes. They might get the idea that I don't care

There's just you, Len. You aren't yet a newbie or neophyte in amateur radio. If I can foresee the future, you won't ever be a newbie or neophyte in amateur radio.

Let's see...you take no action, you make good on your statement that you'll be leaving this newsgroup and I'll have to be reminded that I can foresee the future.

It would have nothing to do with age or with stupidity. There are plenty of fellows who have failed an element. They retake it until they pass.

As I've said, Len, given the way you act, I prefer if you don't obtain an amateur radio license. I can do nothing for or against your taking and passing an exam. I'd probably think more of you if you took and passed an exam for any class amateur radio exam. The "sooner" doesn't matter. The time you wasted typing your fingers to the bone here in r.r.a.p. is your time. You wasted it.

> For any of the three possible scenarios I would proceed

The first scenario doesn't have you proceeding at all, but have it your way, Len. Get an amateur radio license or don't get an amateur radio license. Either way, my life doesn't change.

Don't you think I could pass, Len?

I've spent no time accusing others of pushing me around. That's what you do. You write of someone who DEMANDS something of you when no demand has been made.

> Oh, my, who could EVER

I have a better scenario, Len. Who is capable of pushing me around?
Am I going to be searching for my teeth? Is someone going to lay a 2 x 4 against my head?

You're no closer to an amateur radio license than you were decades back.
You're no closer than you were over ten years ago when you began posting to r.r.a.p. A standstill is always a standstill.

Now, now, you contradict yourself again. You just said your couldn't care less if I didn't become a licensed radio amateur. Try to keep your sneering arrogant commentary on-track, OK?

>The time you wasted typing your fingers to the bone here in Tsk, I've never "typed fingers to the bone." Skin has always been intact. 22 years and many millions of characters later, my fingers are still intact.

>You wasted it.

I eliminate waste regularly. Remember, move your vowels every day or you will get consonated...

You, of course, have "heard of all." :-) [all gods of radio are that way...]

My advocacy in here has always been to eliminate the code test in any amateur radio license test. Yet, you are still confused about that. Doesn't that give you some inclination that something is wrong with YOU?

>Don't you think I could pass, Len?

Not as a human being...

As an Otto Preminger impersonator, yes, if you lost some weight. "Stalag 17" was a stage play before it was a movie. Keep hoping for a production near you on that and go to the audition. I'm sure you could impress the producers into giving that part to you.

>I've spent no time accusing others of pushing me around.

True. You simply push others around. QED.

The FCC?

I don't know. Did you lose them AGAIN?

>No one needs fabricate faults of yours, Len.

San Andreas kept denying HIS fault and look what happened...

>You're no closer to an amateur radio license than you were decades back.

Tsk, you keep saying I was after an amateur radio license.

I kept stating what my advocacy was. You keep on with your fabrication of "my desires." :-)

You see nothing wrong with your actions? Oh, my, you ARE confused on what is happening.

>You're no closer than you were over ten years ago when you began posting

INCORRECT. FAULTY. MISTAKE.

Hello, didn't you read FCC 06-178? It will order the removal of morse code testing from amateur radio license testing effective 23 February 2007.

Sunnuvagun! SUCCESS!!! :-)

How is that an oversimplification?

Is the distance from Tokyo, Japan to Vladivostok 500 miles or more than 660 miles - or some other distance? In objective reality, it cannot be both 500 miles and more than 660 miles at the same time.

That's incorrect.

The fact that I have not done something does not mean it is beyond my capabilities.

I have examples.

If I give you one example of a factual error that Len has made in the past few days, but which I have not yet corrected, will you agree that I have proved my point?

Nope.

It's someone who has seen and avoided the flaw in your cunning plan.

I believe Len's definition of "abuse" is any statement that disagrees with something he states.

As a vat of wisdom with "years" of experience as a commercial radio operator, us lowly 'amateurs' are supposed to bow down to his 'professional' greatness.

True, Mark, very true, but it illustrates how some radio hobbyists have gone over the edge into having amateur radio RULE THEIR LIVES AND THOUGHTS. :-)

"Lifestylers." A colloquial term for those who have the notion, the fantasy, the delusion, that amateur radio is the basis for everything, that everything revolves around their hobby...and whatever They think.

These lifestylers seem to relish the attention the press pay to scandalous events. The WANT to be identified with scandal and resultant noteriety...provided there is the least little mention of THEIR hobby, even if indirectly so.

It's difficult to understand why anyone wants to think this particular story is suddenly "news," a day late (and a dollar short). Anyone who has bothered to listen to radio-TV-cable broadcasts, gets a daily newspaper, will have known about it yesterday. It was a featured item of notorious scandal and one person's emotional upset.

But, the news networks paid scant attention to these astronauts' required tasks and didn't mention that they were "radio amateurs." [i.e., federally-licensed radio amateurs] All the radio amateurs at QRZ had to make a big deal out of that. In Captain Novak's case, she is an Annapolis graduate, served as a military test pilot (1,500 flying hours), a working mother of three offspring. It is news that a female makes it to a Captaincy in the USN, itself a rare thing. Add to that all of the other things and it builds to a picture of someone who has accomplished MUCH in the first half of their life. But, look at what the "amateur community" wants to feature: A "HAM" Astronaut! "HAM" takes precedence in the description of this person. AS IF amateur radio was the driving force of her accomplishments...AND later downfall.

"HAM astronaut," high emphasis on the "HAM." An emotional descriptor used only by the HAM Lifestylers. Itself, such selective description is an emotional fault of the life-stylers not too different than what Captain Novak has undergone in her rather bizarre "love affair" and attempted kidnapping-battery of another woman. These emotionally-driven individuals have escaped reality into some other dark place in their heads. They've lost their objective realization to the greater internal comfort of their fantasies, misapplying what really matters with what they personally desire...then attempt to judge others by their own internal emotional 'standards.'

Amateur radio is a fun hobby, but it is ONLY a hobby in the real world. That is NOT what the self-defined paragons of the particular hobby of amateur radio define it as...Novak was a "HAM" astronaut. Instead of being influenced as a child of a real event (Armstrong-Aldrin first steps on the moon), their inference is that "it was due to an 'interest' in ham radio!" Not so. Passing a 25-question Technician license test is just one of MANY and varied "tests" some astronauts are required to do. Those other "HAM" astronauts are all required to perform a role of Public Relations, to keep the public (taxpayers) informed of NASA activities, keep the public interested in NASA. That's not to discount the value of PR, that is very real and it is a good service of government to the people. But, it is a gross misuse of the inference that amateur radio was such a significant impetus to cause them to be such great achievers.

I am waiting for the first actor to have an amateur radio license. Will the ARRL dub them a "HAM Actor?" :-)
I say if such happened, AMPAS would have some unkind words for the League...and some wide-ranging PR contacts of its own that the ARRL could never top... :-)

Ah - so you add a condition!

Nevertheless, it's a simple task to find an uncorrected factual error in Len's postings here.

Scroll back up this thread to January 30. See the post Len made at 7:56 PM (at least, that's the time Google lists.

In that long, long post, Len says:

""CB" came into being in 1958."

But that's incorrect. By a whole decade.

My point is proved.

Many of us--and I don't mean to make it sound as if I'm including you--are radio amateurs. While amateur radio doesn't rule our lives, it may play a big part in our lives. I can understand that someone in your position might think that strange.

Some of us might think it very odd that a fellow who is not a radio amateur would devote a large amount of time posting to and reading an amateur radio newsgroup.

I think it might be of interest to radio amateurs that one of their number is arrested on attempted murder charges. Is it alright with you if some of us are interested in the story?

I was interested in it yesterday. It was not mentioned by Fox News, CNN or NBC News that the astronaut holds an amateur radio license. Is it alright with you if we look at other sources of information?

I can see that you're getting worked into a lather. She's an ASTRONAUT
ham. She's a NAVY ham. She's a PILOT ham. She's has THREE CHILDREN and she's a ham. She's an ATTEMPTED MURDERER and a ham. She wore a WIG, had a bag full of PECULIAR ITEMS, wore a DIAPER and is a ham.
Feel better?

That seems to be your inference, Len.

It's a little late for you to get the Extra "right out of the box", but you could still get it. After all, you have the AFTRA card and seem interested in showing around.

Sweetums you silly old putz, once again you're demonstrating how completely out of touch with ham radio you really are. You want actors who have been or are hams? We got 'em Sweets. In spades. How 'bout Marlon Brando KE6PZH/FO5GJ? Or Priscilla Presley. Will Donnie Osmond KA7EVD or Andy Devine WB^RER do? Then there's always Brigadier General Jimmy Stewart N6KGB . . want the rest of the list?

Hi Stefan,

Not quite what I'm saying.

I'm saying the the US FCC has no jurisdiction to enforce the laws of another country. If any laws are broken in this case, they are broken in Mynamar (Burma), and FCC has no jursidiction outside the USA or US flagged vessels on the high seas (neither does the FBI for that matter) .

They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they posed as an underage person and agreed to do all sorts of sex acts wioth adult males, and they are adults posing as teenager themselves. They make themsleves into liars by falsely impersonating underage persons and by not fuilfilling the words they tell the victims online in their chats. Why don't you read it where they tell these victims of their deceit about how they have been with grown men and such? Why don't you read it where they say, "That would be cool." after someone makes an advance towards an adult who is posing as a teenager? And, where they agree to meet the person, etc.
Lost control, didn't you?
Is that why you feel as if you need to lie so much now? I see where lots of these false impersonation games are not sticking. I think the FCC could take some very indirect action, if they really wanted to. That does not mean FCC has jurisdiction outside US-controlled territory.

For example, if a person commits communications-related violations elsewhere, FCC could consider those violations as a "character issue" when issuing or renewing someone's FCC license. That thinking goes along the lines of "if the person won't follow the communications laws of Country X when the person is in Country X, why should we expect that person to follow FCC rules when they are under FCC jurisdiction?".

FCC has used a similar argument against the licenses of people convicted of non-radio crimes in the USA.

So while it is not directly going after someone for violations committed outside FCC's jurisdiction, those violations could have FCC-related consequences.

Huh?

The person in question is 43 years old, which means she was born in 1963 or 1964. And there's no indication of how she was raised.

It's a sad, sad story no matter how you look at it, IMHO.

Hmmm - I don't believe that one qualifies, Jim. The concept of the 'Citizen's Band' dates back to 1945 - but the allocation was way up in the UHF bands, where radio equipment for the average 'citizen' was quite impractical, due to the the technology of the time (both size and cost of the transceiving equipment would have been enormous!. In other words, it existed in regulations only, but was virtually unusable for its intended purpose by the general public it was designed to serve.

The "Citizen's Band" that exists to this day, in the 27 MHz band, does indeed date back to 1958.

I'd say he was right on this one, from a practical point of view.

If it doesn't come up in criminal or civil prosecution by the foreign government, it'll never blip the radar at the FCC. Until or unless one of those takes place, it is simply hearsay.

I'd think it very unlikely unless an individual is prosecuted and found

Good point! It takes a conviction, not just an accusation.

I don't either. Point is, they have the authority to do it if there is a conviction and at their own discretion.

A condition you added at the last possible moment.

It does. Len got the date wrong, that's all. A simple factual error.

That's your opinion.

The facts are that "CB" was created at least a decade before 1958. There was type-accepted CB equipment on the market in 1948. There were several manufacturers making and selling UHF CB equipment before 1958, and it was being bought and used. There were even handhelds for UHF CB.

Probably the best known example was the Vocaline transceiver, which was small, simple, rugged, relatively low cost and easy to use.

It did not "exist in regulations only". How usable it was is a matter of opinion.

But the usability or popularity of pre-1958 CB is not the issue. The fact is that Len got the date for the creation of CB wrong.

Yes, it does. But CB was not created in 1958.

27 MHz CB is sometimes referred to as "Class D" CB. IIRC, Class C CB refers to 27 MHz radio control.

But Class A and Class B CB refer to UHF CB, and predate 1958 by at least a decade.

Of course you would say that. But you'd be mistaken.

Yes, it is. The fact is that CB was created at least ten years before 1958. What band it was on, and how popular it was are immaterial - the radio service known as CB wasn't created in 1958.

Those are the facts.

I would certainly agree with you BUT what his niblets was doing was not being discriminating, far from he. He invited comments then refused to post any of those that he did not approve of. As in point, he revised that thing he calls a blog, to eliminate anything he wrote

That doesn't meet the definition of "censorship".
It is very difficult for a private citizen who is not employed or appointed by the government to engage in "censorship".

Editors of newspapers invite letters to the editors and then refuse to publish them. That's not "censorship".

QEX invites articles to be submitted and then refuses to publish them after agreeing to publish them. That's not censorship.

Oh, oh, the "Trustee from the Tool Room" stepped out of his little machine shop and re-reading of "Gullible's Travels" to babble some inanities about Inane Radio:

>You want actors >who have been or are hams? We got 'em Sweets. In spades.

"In spades?" Oh, my, NO. US amateur radio does NOT attract "persons of color!" Hardly ANY black people are shown in ham magazine photographs.

>How 'bout Marlon Brando KE6PZH/FO5GJ?

What about him? He was a borderline nut-case, a recluse, despite being recognized by his craft as one of the topmost ACTORS of his or any time. Unquestionably a great ACTOR, one who would make the audience really believe he WAS the character he portrayed. Yes, he owned a whole island in French Polynesia and liked screwing around with French women. Feel free to ACT that part, why don't you? :-)

Do you have a VALID copy of his French license certificate?
Does anyone? Is it really an amateur license or is it a commercial one? Is there a US record of "KE6PZH" that is VALID? No. The only "record" is HERESAY, on someone's list on the Internet. A quick search on the Internet will come up with many COPIES of that same "list" on other sites.
Copying the SAME list over and over again doesn't make it true.

Did Marlon Brando have a dog named "Fideaux?" :-)

Tsk, you will find that celebrities generate all kinds of tales from all the wanna-bes, those that want to attach Their activity to the rich/famous...in hopes that others will "respect" them by having the rich/famous aura rub off on them.

Marlon Brando was born Marlon Brando. His surname came from (way back) a German immigrant who spelled it 'Brandau' then offspring altered it to 'Brandow' and finally to 'Brando.' The "Brandeaux" surname doesn't appear in USA records for Marlon Brando. Not at the FCC, not anywhere except in some AMATEUR Innernet listings...which the listers say "isn't 'absolutely' accurate." Read the fine print at those "list" sites.

Am I or anyone SUPPOSED to accept the ARRL's "word" for it that whatever They say is "TRUTH?" No. ARRL is a membership organization and a publication manufacterer.
Like all sales and marketing folk, they are purveyors of "feeling good" to their buyers. They "make an offer ya can't refuse." :-)

>Or Priscilla Presley.

No official record.

>Will Donnie Osmond KA7EVD or Andy Devine WB^RER do?

Neither one is a recognized ACTOR. Not here in this part of the USA that is also the entertainment capitol of the world.

There is NO official record of Donnie Osmond the entertainer as "KA7EVD." Station callsign "WB6RER" belongs to the Kingman, AZ, "Haualapai Amateur Radio Club" and that ARC says "they celebrate Andy Devine Day annually."
NO connection between entertainment person Andy Devine and official US records seem to exist.

Note: Younger folk cannot 'connect' to Andy Devine of many years ago, that being before their time. They MIGHT be able to recognize 'Devine,' a transsexual actor of more modern times. NO relationship.

>Then there's always Brigadier General Jimmy Stewart N6KGB

There is? :-) On official records of the FCC, his name would appear as 'James Stewart' or 'James M. Stewart' or possibly 'James Maitland Stewart." Depending on the list source, there are (4) 'James M. Stewart' listings at www.qrz.org and (8) listings for 'James M. Stewart' at www.arrl.org. He was called AND listed as 'Jimmy Stewart' in the movie and TV industry out of affection of his fellow craftspersons. Strangely, the only biographic mention of any amateur radio activity is found ONLY in amateur-radio-interest publications and websites.

>. . want the rest of the list?

No. Common professional names are easy to fake or impersonate. Especially the recluses such as Marlon Brando (alleged to have used the pseudonym 'Martin Brumby' in talking "all night long to ship traffic in the Pacific" according to one in the UK). Note: one "list" site has Brando's alleged licenses as "WA6RBU" and "F0SGQ."

Some REAL people in the entertainment industry WERE licensed radio amateurs. One is the author of the novel "The French Atlantic Affair" wherein an on-board passenger helps thwart hijackers of a fictitious French ocean liner through a ham radio contact with a Santa Monica, CA, amateur relaying to the Rand Corporation. Good novel, long but suspenseful, was made into a terribly-distorted two-part microseries for TV. Look him up on Amazon. SK.

Roy Neal (professional name, SK), long-time KNBC-TV reporter here, good air appearance, watched him work before a remote camera at the LA Convention Center. Retired from NBC a bit before (?) Bill Amidon, the real licensed radio amateur who began selling iron powder and ferrite cores in small quantities to radio hobbyists.

Senator Barry Goldwater was a publicized licensed radio amateur, no question. However, he wasn't (in the absolute sense) an ACTOR. Now there's quite some debate on whether or not politicians are actors, but that is beside the point. :-)

>> I say if such happened, AMPAS would have some unkind words >> for the League...and some wide-ranging PR contacts of its >> own that the ARRL could never top... :-)

Sonny, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences (AMPAS) AND the Association of Film and Radio Artists (AFTRA) aren't "small" or "hobby" organizations in the Multi-BILLION-dollar industry of entertainment, something that affects USA economy AND USA social fabric in a very direct way. Calling a pro actor a HAM ACTOR is almost an ultimate pejorative, a personal swear word against them. Lots and lots of licensed, practicing legal typse in this city make their living (very comfortable ones) on defending/prosecuting those who cuss out high-income professional actors or speak nasty to them. ARRL is very SMALL potatoes in that scene...wouldn't stand a chance.

All you've stated in your non-illuminating babble of "factoids" is UNPROVEN call sign owners or DEAD people.

The entertainment industry is constantly bringing up NEW performers, constantly generating entertainment of many kinds. WHERE are the licensed radio amateurs among them? What have YOU done to get NEW folks into amateur radio? Chip in some pocket change for a group gift of (wow!) $100 "incentive" to become licensed with a code test before 23 Feb 07? You can't hold back the dawn by pinching coins from the petty cash drawer as "incentive."

Now go back to dreaming dreams, olde tymer, like the episode of shooting bears for naval intelligence. It will make YOU feel very good. Won't matter one whit to reality, though, it goes on without your bluster and bravado.

Mark's has defined 'censorship' as having one (or more) of his postings rejected by a moderated newsgroup.

Using that same definition, he practices 'censorship' in his own blog site's 'readers comments' area.

Yup. In his 1994 interview with Larry King:

http://transcripts.cnn.com/TRANSCRIPTS/0407/04/lkl.00.html

CALLER: Hi, thanks for taking my call.

Mr. Brando, I hope this is not -- isn't a frivolous question, but I understand you're a ham radio operator, or you were, and I wonder if you'd mind talking about that? And I appreciate it.

BRANDO: I am a ham radio operator. And the thing I enjoyed about it is anonymity, because When you call up and you say, "This is Marlon Brando calling," they give you the routine -- any famous person.

KING: So what did you call as? What -- take a name, you mean?

BRANDO: Oh, I don't know. You call the store, and they say, "What's your name?" "Marlon Brando," and they say, "Yes, I'm Greta Garbo," and they hang up. And, so...

KING: It's fun, though?

BRANDO: What?

KING: It was fun?

BRANDO: I still am a ham radio operator. As a matter of fact, I'm updating my license, and I think it's wonderful. And with the new international highway of communications, it is now very quickly falling upon us. It's going to be tied up with computers. As a matter fact, I'm on Online America.

>Or Priscilla Presley.

Certainly. Though you have to look her up under her maiden name of "Beaulieu" to find her in the callbook (N6YOS).

Will Donnie Osmond
>KA7EVD or Andy Devine WB^RER do? Then there's always Brigadier General
>Jimmy Stewart N6KGB . . want the rest of the list?

N6KGB was not the actor credited as Jimmy Stewart ("It's a Wonderful Life", "Mr Smith Goes to Washington", etc.). However, he was an actor, who appeared in credits by another name, Stewart Granger:

http://www.imdb.com/name/nm0001289/

I recommend him in "King Solomon's Mines" and "Prisoner of Zenda."

There's quite a few copies of the list out there. Most of them are pretty accurate, but most of them also have a few errors and omissions here and there.

This is probably the most complete, and best-researched, version:

Not really. The band that most people would refer to as "CB" did indeed come along in 1958.

How many were in use? If it wasn't used, did it exist? (Practically or in theory only?)?

How many were in use?? And I'll bet that owners of that equipment were less than amused when the band was reallocated! (both owners, that is... :)

Practical CB was, though.

You could also argue that radio broadcasting was begun when Fessenden made his Christmas transmissions to ships at sea......(in '06, IIRC).
That would be silly, though - as virtually no one possessed the equipment to receive the broadcast.

A boadcast? Technically, yes. But practically - no.

If a tree falls in the woods.....etc.

That is indeed true, but was a failure - corrected in '58 with the Class D allocation.

Are they? You're wrong!

...sorry, couldn't resist :)

Those are the facts only if you count a failed experiment in 1945 - which was corrected in 1958, and continues to this day!

There are shades of gray too, Sherlock!

Len Anderson stated that the name Brandeaux doesn't show up in the FCC

Yup, I got myself twisted around my own axle on this one and I stand corrected. Interesting tale though. There were two well-known screen actors whose given names were James Stewart. One was a Brit and was N6KGB the other was a Pennsylvania-born USAF reserve flag officer who was not a radio amateur. This link explains it nicely.

A question in my mind is whether Mike Griffin's (Dr. Michael D.
Griffin, NASA Director and NR3A) hormonally disturbed Robochick will make the list. How 'bout a list of infamous hams . . ?

Heh heh heh. Moon? A mere quarter-million miles away, but saying that off-hand is classified as an ERROR and MISTAKE to Cranky. He gonna do da Spanky and demand 6-digit absolute numbers or have me taken out and shot for making a MISTAKE!

Nah, Cranky no be wrong. Ever. "CB" radio (as all know it today) on 11m was authorized in the USA in 1958. It was in all the electronics trade papers and Regulations of our FCC. In 1958 little Cranky was just beginning to read, but might have reached 13 WPM level in morse code...

The pissy pedant is correct in saying CLASS A and CLASS B Citizens Band radio existed prior to 1958 but that was above 400 MHz and never became a market best-seller. The 11m Citizens Band here was CLASS C (radio control, now in our Part 95 regs as "Radio Control Radio Service") and CLASS D (23 channels of radiotelephone, sharing channel 23 with R-C). The old A and B classes of Citizens Band were eliminated several years back (maybe decades, exact date immaterial to normal folks). By the time of regulation changes to "CB" here, the number of channels was expanded to 40. Not that THAT helped since there were at least a million "11m" CB radios in-use here then and more in various world nations. Hardly anything but heterodynes. [at least they were 'hetero', it would be hell if they were 'homodynes'...:-)]

Tsk, tsk, in "going there" all I get is the prompt "License Search Error."

Thank you ever so much for the cut-and-paste, Mr. Schleck.

All the licensed radio amateurs can now IDENTIFY with ACTORS. "Actors" are those who play at being other people. All will become FAMOUS as a result. Applause.

All is TRUTH if a licensed radio amateur says it is...

Really? Not 'America Online?' :-)

Was Brando impersonating someone when he said that? Playing a "part?" Is Larry King scrupulously 'honest' and totally objective as an 'interviewer?' Brando fluffed a line?!?

Brando has been said to "impersonate others" on ham radio.
Why is it 'impossible' for him to IMPERSONATE someone he may not be on broadcast TV? Marlon Brando is an excellent ACTOR, no doubt.

There is a Donald Osmond of Tega Cay, SC, on www.qrz.com as WD4SKT. However that bio states a birth year of 1954.
Singer-entertainer Donny Osmond was born in 1957 according to The World Almanac. Looks good at 50.

Tsk, I couldn't find any mention of 'amateur radio' on that

OK, I'll call up Siskel Productions in Chicago and have you booked on "Ebert and Roeper" as guest host. Sound all right? Will you accept scale?

Sorry, but Leonard Maltin only reports solo...

Please give 'Andy Griffith' (WA7WYV) out in Pima, AZ, my very best wishes. I hope he doesn't fall off his roof in Pacific Palisades, CA, trying to fix his TV antenna again. Did he move to AZ to avoid falling accidents?

Oh, and I can't celebrate communion with W8JK in downtown Los Angeles. I'm not Catholic nor does W8JK seem to be on the official records for anyone, not even Roger Cardinal Mahoney. Praise the Lord!

Keep those Lists and "corrections" coming so all you olde-

Excuse me, I have to go to market to buy more Alpeaux for my dog Fideaux.

I didn't bother. Somebody "HAD" to spank me so it

Remember, we all have to FOLLOW Cranky on his

The A and B classes dies a horrible death because - they were'nt useable by the target audience. Sure, there were transceivers available for 450 MHz in 1945 - but they would have cost big bucks, and been massive beasts as well. (as Ptoooey so aptly points out, there were handheld units available for these frequencies in the '50's, but they would have required King Kong's hand to hold them! And King Kon's wallet to buy them, as well.....) .

But, because there was a regulation in place that said "Citizen's Band" (regardless of whether it was usable by the "citizens' without exorbuiant expense and superhuman effort), then CB must have existed in 1945.

What an idiot! This guy is proof that you shouldn't sign your organ donor card without reading it very carefully - looks like they came for his brain a few years early! :)

I'd suggest taking his word as Gospel on that subject - Dave is an expert on the subject of "not funny". :)

But, on the plus side, he can sign his organ donor card any time.

I do find it unusual that the US Diplomatic Corpse did not require that particular characteristic from their employees! You'd think that that would be a prerequisite..... :)

At some point, there will be hams on HF who have not passed a code test, but want to give Morse code a try on the air. Of course they're not going to be that skillful at first. So maybe there should be an informal subband or frequency for beginners and elmers to hang out.

Why? Just call CQ at your comfortable code speed or answer CQs in your speed range. That's what I do.
If someone gets too fast, ask them to QRS. If they won't slow down, try QFU. :-)

Why not the Novice CW sub-bands?

Sounds like a good idea to me, to help those who want to learn.

I'd recommend that they go to frequencies in the general area of the FISTS calling frequencies. This group is always willing to help a new comer and there are people who regularly hang out there listening for someone new.

The old Novice bands would be a bit of a problem. With the change in allocations that went into effect on December 15th, the 80m Novice subband is now filled with SSB transmissions. Half of the 40m subband is also now used for SSB.

Having no knowledge of policy matters, virtually everything this alleged phony dyslexic posts is off-topic.

However, kb9rqz does serve as a useful idiot for Len, who uses this guy as a springboard for launching some of his more interesting posts.

Just as there is a purpose for the lowly cockroach, there is a purpose for kb9rqz .

We've experienced something similar here in r.r.a.p. There's a guy who's been posting here for over a decade, trying to get some amateur radio aura to rub off on him. He don't get no respect.

It doesn't really make any difference whether your do or whether you don't, Len--really.

All the PROFESSIONAL writers I know use the term "publisher."
Of course they also use the word "manufacturer" rather than the less well known "manufacterer."

I'd love to hear more about the actor "Devine". There was one called "Divine", but he died.

It seems that the AFTRA card holder in our midst has forgotten to include the word beginning with "T" in the name of the organization.

Here's your chance, Len. You have the AFTRA card. If you had opened the box containing that brand new Extra Class ticket, you could have been a contender.

50 Khz up from the lower edges of the five traditional HF bands.

Quadruple the number of minutes per week W1AW & Co. transmits 5, 7.5

Well <he said, assuming a serious mien> there was ONE "simple" 400+ MHz transceiver...el cheapo modulated oscillator cum super-regen detector. Forgot who made it but it was really cheap in everything inside. I had gotten one free from another who wanted to set up a link down in Inglewood, CA. It would reach, at best, a mile and a half. That was in the later 1950s and the UHF bow-tie and reflector aluminum wires had already started to crystalize enough to snap off easily.
Still had it when I moved into this house in 1963 but the steel chassis and steel cabinet were so rusty I just tossed it a year later. :-(

>But, because there was a regulation in place that said "Citizen's

Not quite. Our FCC was struggling mightily with all sorts of post-WW2 regulation, radio service changes back then...and preparing for the onslaught of TV in gorgeous black and white. FM broadcast was about to move to double its pre-WW2 frequencies and the various public safety agencies wanted to get to "low band" (30 to 50 MHz) and, maybe, "mid band" (150 to about 160 MHz). It would seem that the original US Citizens Band on UHF was a sort-of afterthought. Manufacturers started to lobby for lower frequencies in this tube-only era and the post-WW2 FCC looked at the amateur "11m" band (not an International allocation) and the rest was history. Radio-wise, the fit hit the shan after 1958 with all sorts of different radio services wanting this and that plus the electronics industry had to step in to stop the color TV "war" between CBS Labs and RCA (neither one would have been suitable). Our FCC was barely keeping up with the changes everywhere. Again, "CB" was an afterthought radio service and NOBODY really anticipated the surge in off-shore design and production that would flood
N. America by a decade later.

NOT in Foggy Bottom (part of DC).

The soubriquet of "Ugly American" was bestowed honestly by those in foreign lands. :-(

I'm one US citizen who hasn't been happy with State for a couple decades. Of course the <koff> Presidents steer our State Department so that may explain much.
On the other hand, the first new US Embassy in Moscow was a bugging disaster and we had to scrap it. KGB must have had a ball stuffing bugs in that building.
Where were the State inspectors? Busy buying up souvenirs at the GUM?

Version 4.1 improved on the basis of 4.0. Added show/hide track in addition to track removal. Also, the color in which the mobile station names are displayed can be customized. And you can set up a tactical call sign, and choose to beacon it instead of youe regular call sign. In filter settings, you can choose to accept stations in the track list without manually adding them. This version has improved legacy TNC support as well.

Thanks, Michael KF6ZDM

Do you mean the Vocaline unit?

So you admit, Len, that FCC did indeed create CB long before 1958.

Thanks for owning up to your earlier factual error.

Len tells us that the UHF CB frequencies were an afterthought. Yet the Commission later chose frequencies which could not have been much worse for local communications in offering the 27 MHz channels. CB operators almost immediately began violating the regs governing their licenses.

Dee may be correct regarding competition for band space. However, I still think more operators are likely to know where the 'novice' subbands are located (most hams have a band-plan chart somewhere in their shack) than they are going to know the 'FISTS' regular calling frequencies.

Correction to Mark's comment. I said phone NOT General phone. It went to the Advanced and Extra licensees.

With so many having internet access these days, it's not hard to find the FISTS calling frequencies.

However, I'd recommend to the new people that they be the ones to call CQ.
Since the courteous thing to do is to answer a CQ at the speed it is sent, they have a very good chance of getting someone who will slow down for them.

3.525 to 3.600 MHz
7.025 to 7.125 MHz
21.025 to 21.200 MHz
28.0 to 28.5 MHz

Right now, all the above frequencies are available to all FCC licensed amateurs who have passed a Morse Code test. They are the current "Novice bands".

On February 23, they will be available to all FCC licensed amateurs.

What better place to use Morse Code?

I suggest 3.550 and 7.050 as "watering holes".

Yeah, but how many people KNOW about FISTS to begin with?

Frankly, the first time I heard about them was in this newsgroup.

The Novice subbands are much more "well known" than FISTS or their calling frequencies.

Whenever I operate in the novice subbands, I always send CQ at 7-10wpm. I figure a little faster will help the folks I communicate with get their speed up, but I certainly slow down if requested.

Counterproposal:

For Casey's concept to work the QRS freqs should be where the CW activity lives in it's largest volumes 24/7. 40M any time but mostly at night and 20M anytime but mostly during daylight hours.

It's unreasonable to expect slocode learners and elmers to latch up reliably on more than a couple bands at most. So there goes 80, 15, 10M and the WARC bands.

7.050 at the top of the hour and 14.050 at the half hour marks.

>W1AW Special Event, Midnight Exam Sessions to Mark New Amateur Rules:
>As new Amateur Radio Service rules phase in Friday, February 23, eliminating the Morse code requirement, Hiram Percy Maxim Memorial Station W1AW will mark the milestone with a weekend-long special event. In addition, a number of Central Connecticut volunteer examiners will be on hand at ARRL Headquarters -- both before and after the new rules become effective at 12:01 AM EST -- to offer Amateur Radio examinations under the current and new rules. ARRL Regulatory Information Specialist Dan Henderson, N1ND, is helping to coordinate the celebration. He says Headquarters staff and other volunteers will keep W1AW active for the "Welcome Weekend" event.
>"W1AW will be on the air all weekend for this special event to celebrate the fact that so many amateurs have gained or will earn new privileges as a result of the rule changes," he said. "The station will operate starting at 12:01 AM Eastern Time on Friday, February 23, continuing into the wee hours and resuming operation during the day. Then W1AW will be on the air on both days of the weekend, from 10 AM until 5 PM -- perhaps longer as conditions and enthusiasm dictate."
>Operation will be on both SSB and CW. W1AW operators will concentrate their activities on the Technician and General class HF subbands. On SSB, the station will use its normal phone frequencies -- 1.811, 3.990, 7.290, 14.290, 18.160 and 21.390 MHz. On 10 meters, W1AW will operate SSB on or about 28.480 MHz.
>Henderson says operating will be casual unless pileups develop. "The purpose is to welcome newcomers to new privileges," he said.
>"First Contact" certificates will be available as part of this event. ARRL invites anyone making a first contact or first HF contact to enter the contact information on the ARRL "Welcome Weekend" Web site http://www.arrl.org/HFWelcome/ and receive a certificate in return. "If the first contact is with W1AW we will also be including a W1AW QSL card for the contact," Henderson added.
>The ARRL anticipates a huge influx of upgrade applications once the Morse code requirement disappears. In addition, all Technician licensees will have limited HF privileges starting February 23, whether or not they've passed a Morse code test.

>
>Amateur Radio exam sessions both before and after the zero hour will offer an opportunity for applicants either to upgrade under the outgoing licensing rules at the last possible opportunity or under the new licensing rules at the first possible opportunity.
>"Dual exam sessions are scheduled at ARRL Headquarters around the effective time of the new licensing rules," says Brennan Price, N4QX, a former ARRL staff member and an ARRL VEC volunteer examiner. "At 11 PM on February 22, a session will be held for candidates wishing to upgrade under the existing rules. A few folks have expressed interest in such a session." Price says all Amateur Radio written and telegraphy elements will be offered until midnight.
>"At 12:01 AM February 23, a second session will begin under the new licensing rules," he said. "Examiners will not only be evaluating previously earned Certificates of Successful Completion of Exam (CSCEs) for upgrades, but will be offering all written elements." Two teams of volunteer examiners will be on site until all applicants have been served.
>On or after February 23, applicants upgrading on the basis of a valid CSCE must present the certificate for element credit, fill out an application and pay any applicable exam session fee, which most VECs charge. Only after the VE team has issued a CSCE for upgrade credit may applicants actually use their new operating privileges on the air.

Mark and I are not really married in the legal sense of the word. We live together and Mark made a committment that we will live as man and wife for as long as we share his shed.
Mark does not "see" legal agreements when it comes to man and wife. We moved in together and Mark made a loving committtment to tell others that I am his wife.

Like Mark, I am a bit offbeat and will NEVER take his name as mine. Mark claims we are married, but we are not. This is why I keep my maiden name and refuse to have sexual relations with a man who flirts with other men.

OK, I'll bite:

Why is that an insult to anyone?

The exam session will start before the new rules go into effect, and end after they are in place. People will have the choice of taking the exams under the old rules or the new ones.

Where's the insult in that?

The event is referred to as a "celebration" and is called a "Welcome Weekend".

Where's the insult in that?

Sounds like a party.

Techs and Novices don't have 20. Late at night even 40 gets iffy.

At this time of the sunspot cycle, 80 is the most reliable after dark.

Novices and Techs don't have the WARC bands so they're not a good choice.

The days of the amateur world getting 40WPM ditty boppers from the military or Western Union are long gone. You'll have to home grow any new converts. Expect them to be less than skillful.

Should one come along that is skillful, you won't be able to tell if they've passed a code test or not. Your eleitist attitude will make you think they have.

If you are "insulted" because someone makes the personal choice to take a code test -- or are insulted by any personal choice someone else makes in life -- it sounds to me that you have deep-rooted emotional issues you should discuss with a psychiatrist.

Perhaps Mork can recommend one.

>W1AW Special Event, Midnight Exam Sessions to Mark New Amateur Rules:
>As new Amateur Radio Service rules phase in Friday, February 23, eliminating the Morse code requirement, Hiram Percy Maxim Memorial Station W1AW will mark the milestone with a weekend-long special event. In addition, a number of Central Connecticut volunteer examiners will be on hand at ARRL Headquarters -- both before and after the new rules become effective at 12:01 AM EST -- to offer Amateur Radio examinations under the current and new rules. ARRL Regulatory Information Specialist Dan Henderson, N1ND, is helping to coordinate the celebration. He says Headquarters staff and other volunteers will keep W1AW active for the "Welcome Weekend" event.
>"W1AW will be on the air all weekend for this special event to celebrate the fact that so many amateurs have gained or will earn new privileges as a result of the rule changes," he said. "The station will operate starting at 12:01 AM Eastern Time on Friday, February 23, continuing into the wee hours and resuming operation during the day. Then W1AW will be on the air on both days of the weekend, from 10 AM until 5 PM -- perhaps longer as conditions and enthusiasm dictate."
>
>Operation will be on both SSB and CW. W1AW operators will concentrate their activities on the Technician and General class HF subbands. On SSB, the station will use its normal phone frequencies -- 1.811, 3.990, 7.290, 14.290, 18.160 and 21.390 MHz. On 10 meters, W1AW will operate SSB on or about 28.480 MHz.
>
>Henderson says operating will be casual unless pileups develop. "The purpose is to welcome newcomers to new privileges," he said.
>
>"First Contact" certificates will be available as part of this event. ARRL invites anyone making a first contact or first HF contact to enter the contact information on the ARRL "Welcome Weekend" Web site http://www.arrl.org/HFWelcome/ and receive a certificate in return. "If the first contact is with W1AW we will also be including a W1AW QSL card for the contact," Henderson added.
>The ARRL anticipates a huge influx of upgrade applications once the Morse code requirement

disappears. In addition, all Technician licensees will have limited HF privileges starting February 23, whether or not they've passed a Morse code test.
>
>Amateur Radio exam sessions both before and after the zero hour will offer an opportunity for applicants either to upgrade under the outgoing licensing rules at the last possible opportunity or under the new licensing rules at the first possible opportunity.
>
>"Dual exam sessions are scheduled at ARRL Headquarters around the effective time of the new licensing rules," says Brennan Price, N4QX, a former ARRL staff member and an ARRL VEC volunteer examiner. "At 11 PM on February 22, a session will be held for candidates wishing to upgrade under the existing rules. A few folks have expressed interest in such a session." Price says all Amateur Radio written and telegraphy elements will be offered until midnight.
>"At 12:01 AM February 23, a second session will begin under the new licensing rules," he said. "Examiners will not only be evaluating previously earned Certificates of Successful Completion of Exam (CSCEs) for upgrades, but will be offering all written elements." Two teams of volunteer examiners will be on site until all applicants have been served.
>On or after February 23, applicants upgrading on the basis of a valid CSCE must present the certificate for element credit, fill out an application and pay any applicable exam session fee, which most VECs charge. Only after the VE team has issued a CSCE for upgrade credit may applicants actually use their new operating privileges on the air.
>Additional details and more information will be available on the ARRL Web site in the days leading up to February 23.

my birthday is the 21 of feb 9i'll be 34 then) i live near Springfield IL, and 33 white unmarried, Bisexual, switch (tend to be a a bit more sub than Dom) who has experenced both sub and Dom with other Males, but has only been Dom with women, and would really like to try Femdom. Employed but not flush enough to make a ProDom my first choice. i will not deal with solid waste but i think every thing thing else is possible (i hedge because as soon as i think I have heard it all someone seems to come up with something new) Things i diffinently like are body worship, hot wax, bondage, spanking. i have done and enoyed with people really into them watersports, lite bloodlicking (i knew a girl into Vampires ok?) these are things i likely to enjoy if they trun someone on, but fall flat if the other party(s) aren't real into them, in that vein i will consider and may well get into something i if it really turns you on.
--(end quote)--

Did you ever get the spanking you wanted? I'll bet you would LOVE to wear an adult diaper to a ham fest. Probably already've done it!

How so, Mark?

You are a self-proclaimed Gay Pagan Dyslexic Ham.

Assuming for the moment that the dyslexia is real and not a feigned attempt to achieve victim status, that leaves us with 3 other personal choices you've made in your life:

1. being gay
2. being a pagan, and
3. being a ham

How exactly is it an insult to me personally when you choose one of those three activities, as it appears to be an insult to you personally when someone else decides to take a code test?

Does it somehow affect (and insult) me when you decide to be gay?

Does it somehow affect (and insult) me when you decide to be a pagan?

Does it somehow affect (and insult) me when you decide to turn on your ham radio?

Likewise, given two hams, Bill and Jay, how is it an insult to you personally when Bill decides to take a code test at 11:45pm and Jay decides to wait until 12:15am and not take a code test?

There have only been 3 or 4 "US Neutrality Acts", all written back in the 1930's dealing with the Spanish Civil War and the run-up to WWII.
None them apply to Burma.

Let me get this straight....

ARRL is helping people make a personal choice.

Those who want to take the Morse Code test will have the opportunity to pass it before midnight.

Those who don't want to take the Morse Code test will have the opportunity to upgrade without that test after midnight.

Who could possibly be insulted by having a choice?

It seems to me that the ARRL is actually welcoming and facilitating the transition. They are offering a VE session as soon as possible after the new rules are in effect. They didn't have to do so - they could have waited a couple of days, or weeks.

So where is the insult? I just don't see it.

I guess my server didn't pick up the original post, so I'm replying by way of N2EY's reply here.

Now, personally, I think the code test should have been done away with back in the 1970's already. I'll agree that the League's opposition to the Communicator Class license back then probably set the process back twenty years. But to toss this kind of barb at the ARRL now, just strikes me as not right.

Remember, the FCC's original intention was to just drop Element 1, and if you were a Technician with no credit for Element 1 and wanted to have HF privileges, you could get 'em by upgrading to General. It was the ARRL that pointed out the disparity between the two varierties of Technicians and convinced FCC to grant the same privileges to all Technician licensees regardless of whether they passed Element 1 or not. If anyone should feel insulted, it's the Techs who had to pass a code test to get the same privileges that everyone with a Tech license is about to enjoy whether they passed a code test or not.

Remember this if you're a Technician licensee who has not passed a code test, and you start operating on HF after the new rules go into effect. If it wasn't for ARRL, you'd be studying for Element 3 instead of operating on 80, 40, 15, and 10 meters. :-)

They also convinced the FCC to grant Novice/Tech-Plus HF privileges to all Technicians. They could have waited until the new rules went into effect and sat back selling study materials to the Techs without Element 1 credit (who would have had to upgrade to general under FCC's original plan in order to get any privs on HF).

Most anywhere, exceptions like 60m do exist. However, it would be a wise move to pick frequencies where other hams usually do CW, in accordance with various band plans. After all, the whole point is to find other hams to work CW with, and that probably won't happen in the middle of a phone subband. Or on a 2m frequency that happens to be a repeater input...

Complete code test elimination would have required FCC to violate the ITU-R treaty requirements. FCC wasn't about to do that 30-odd years ago. In fact they weren't going to do it before 2003.

> I'll agree that the League's opposition to

It should be remembered that the opposition wasn't just to the 1975 version of the Communicator class, but to the whole seven-class dual-ladder proposal of those times.

It should also be remembered that those mid-1970s were when EIA was trying to get FCC to take 220-225 from hams and give it to the proposed "Class E" cb.

Yup. In fact, FCC turned down proposal after proposal to expand Technician/Tech Plus HF privileges, or to create new entry level license classes. Once Element 1 disappeared, the only way for a new ham to get any HF would have been to get a General or Extra.

Good point!

And by having some HF privileges, a precedent is set for more Tech HF privileges.

According to various sources, he sold over 100,000 units for UHF CB.

That's not as popular as 11 meter cb, but it was considerable.

By comparison, in 1950 there were only about 100,000 US hams.

Al Gross was W8PAL, btw.

The Vocaline unit was not made by Al Gross's company.

If my sources are correct, in those days it was also legal to build one's own UHF cb unit, or to convert surplus, if the person had the required commercial license. Conversion of inexpensive units like the BC-645 or AN/APS-13 to UHF cb was possible, for those with the knowledge and skill to do so.

100,000 units sold by a single company isn't practical?

Whether or not UHF CB was "practical" in Len's or "Leo's" opinion is besides the point, too. The fact is that CB was created by FCC in 1948, not 1958, and it was used. It just wasn't as popular as 27 MHz cb would eventually turn out to be.

Check out the numbers. Technicians amount to less than half the total.
Even if one considers Technicians and Technician Pluses combined, the total is less than half.

I'm sorry, Jim - you are incorrect ..... once again!

>I have posted the approximate distance from the earth to the moon here

A bit too approximate, OM - it varies considerably as the distance changes during the orbit cycle:

Mean distance: 238,712 miles
At apogee: 252,586 miles
At perigee: 221,331 miles

That's a >11% error rate at perigee, and approaching a 5% error rate at mean distance. Not too far off at apogee, though - perhaps we can get someone to hold it still for you? :)

You're definitely well within amateur-level expectations, but not likely to cut it at the MSEE level, though..... :)

But you were much closer than you were with your Mars calculations!
One of them went over a 100% error rate. :)

(just in case you forgot again, you can find that one with Google if you search the groups for the following subject line: "Re: European Mars probe to use 80meters to look for Martian water?" - August 7, 2004, to be precise).

You're welcome!

Ptoooey.

No signoff again? Bad form!

73, Leo

(why be 'approximate' when exact is so easy?)

If they've been licensed any amount of time, they've had more years of amateur radio enjoyment. They could easily have just waited and waited and waited.

Push it in the face? That's absurd, perpetual victim. Those who don't want it don't need to take the coded test. That version is for those who do want it. Five people in this area chose to do precisely that when they took and passed their Morse and written exams about a week ago.

I've had electrical and electronics toys for decades, Mark. I submit that you are incapable of judging. I don't see that you're having a CODE victory.

I'd tell you to stick it, but I understand that isn't an insult to you.

I wonder what part of CB eludes Cranky Spanky's understanding?

"CB" AS IT IS KNOWN NOW has been around for 49 years.
Certainly for 48 years since the original ELEVEN METER CITIZENS BAND's two new allocations were announced later in 1958. Note: One MUST be SUPER ACCURATE in saying anything to Cranky Spanky; any approximation will be punishable by his being on your case for his 7-year itching. :-)

>LOL!

I can just see L'Enfant Terrible* reading Radio & Television News magazine in 1958 when it had a feature article on this new Citizens Band - L'Enfant slams down the magazine and shouts to the world, "IT WAS ALREADY THERE YOU IDIOTS, ADMIT IT!!! RADIO AND TELEVISION NEWS IS WRONG! WRONG!
WRONG! AND MAKES FACTUAL ERRORS!!!!!!" Then he stalked off looking for mommie and a clean pair of training pants.

* sounds very classy when Alex Trebek says it on "Jeopardy"
but it has the same meaning as "mean little kid." :-)

>>The number of Technician class amateur licenses has never exceeded the

>A fact, perhaps....at last!

>(whew - that took a while!)

Not quite...

From the daily stats at www.hamdata.com for 10 Feb 07, 14:19 UTC:

Technician 311,157
Technician Plus 40,654
Novice 29,253
General 142,153
Advanced 76,664
Extra 111,393
Club Calls 10,329
Total, ALL 721,603

Club Calls can be subracted from the Total since they are not those of individuals. In that case the total number of INDIVIDUAL USA amateur radio licensees is 711,274.
Based on 711,274 individuals, the percentage of licensees
by class is, by 10 Feb 07:

Technician 43.75%
Technician Plus 5.72%
Novice 4.11%
General 19.99%
Advanced 10.78%
Extra 15.66%

Technician and Technician Plus together = 351,811 or 49.46%

50% of 711,274 is exactly 355,637 or 3,826 more than 351,811.

If this sissy-fuss wants to keep rolling his "factual error" rock uphill all the time, let him. [that's a play on words for all youse who be un-eddycated, about the mythical king Sisyphus] However, all should be able to get the "sissy-fuss" moniker since Cranky be da sissy and all fussy-fussy about "accuracy." :-)

On the home page of www.hamdata.com is a small block of licensee numbers for the last 12 months:

New Licensees: 22,006
Expired Licenses: 28,618

Based on that the LOSS in 12 Months = 6,612

There's NO WAY of escaping the NUMERICAL FACT that USA amateur radio licensee numbers are DECREASING, and have been decreasing for nearly 4 years.

The pro-coders' constant argument is "the original no-code techs grace period is up and they've quit ham radio" or words to that effect. Oh, my, but that does NOT make sense when NEW "no-code techs" are INCREASING at an average rate of THIRTY-TWO per day! The is by far the greatest increase per class.

Cranky has many times tried to rationalize that the amateur extra is the "largest increasing class" but, again, the numbers never fitted his "explanation." However, Cranky is an extra, so therefore he is "right." :-) Upgraders are those already licensed who are just changing their license class...they neither increase nor decrease the total number of licensees.

Based on that Hamdata data of 28,618 EXPIRATIONS in 12 months, that represents a LOSS of 78 per day in the USA! [28,618 / 365 = 78.405] If the newcomers weren't coming in via the no-code tech route, the USA ham license totals would have been shrinking much faster.

But, but, but...cry the rationalizing a-souls of the morse persuasion, WE don't change (they probably claim immortality as well, as Robesin once did in here). They are NEVER wrong, by their own implicit perfection of encyclical utterance. Ave. Sigh.

Bon your,

Anything related to Morse does insult Mark. His panties sure get in a wad if someone says they enjoy conversing in morse code.

Yeah, but its kept Lennie on the outside looking in for years, so it must be working.

CW beacons complain?

You have hidden cameras in Jeff's PO box now? Does the USPS know?

The fact I have the callsign means I was authorized to get it. If I wasn't authorized to get it, the FCC wouldn't have issued it to me.

Was Jim really that insulting, or was the statement, "Anything,

'insulting' " wrong?

Wrong. How did Sammy invent it if he took no exam?

Correct. It was kept long after it served a useful purpose for the intended result of keeping out the riff-raff.

Do try to keep up with the decade of debate already archived. Thanks.

Regardless of what some may have said, code was NEVER intended to be a filter for riff-raff. It was intended to be a test on an area that the FCC deemed every ham should know at some level. Later it was kept because of treaty requirements.

Now you're lying. Jeffrey Hermann let you use his PO Box address in Hawaii to get that callsign.

What did you have to do for Riley to keep that Hawaiin callsign?

Not necessarily.

Suspicious US mail is opened by the postal inspector.

Suspicious packages from other carriers get opened by the Sheriff.

Harassing emails are both forwarded to the state attorney general, and printed and mailed to the attorney general.

Your stalking is now documented. Proceed at your own risk. Best of Luck.

I mean, given you "know" I wasn't in Hawaii, well, you must be following me around and are intimately familiar with my travel schedule.

I'm sure the AG would like to know what type of fruit-loop is bothering him.

Yes, quite. You were quite wrong, Len. Mistaken, in error, barking up the wrong tree, inaccurate,
mixed up, saying the thing which was not, etc.

Here's a link to the post:

http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.amateur.policy/msg/11b6571447aa8231?dmode=source& hl=en

where you wrote:

"Don't you realize that Technician class is now bigger than ALL other US license classes combined?"

To answer your question, I don't realize it because it's not true. Anyone with an understanding of the facts knows it's not true, either.

> From the daily stats at www.hamdata.com
> for 10 Feb 07, 14:19 UTC:

Those stats include licenses that are expired but in the grace period.

But since you like them, let's see what they say:

> Technician 311,157
> Technician Plus 40,654
> Novice 29,253
> General 142,153
> Advanced 76,664

>   Club Calls can be subracted from the Total since they are >   not those of individuals. In that case the total number >   of INDIVIDUAL USA amateur radio licensees is 711,274.

711,274 total individual USA amateur radio licensees
minus 311,157 Technicians
leaves 400,117 individual USA amateur radio licensees
of all other license classes combined.

400,117 is 88,960 more than 311,157. So the claim

"Technician class is now bigger than ALL other US license classes combined"

is simply not true. Not true at all. Not even close -
and using your numbers!

>   Based on 711,274 individuals, the percentage of > licensees
>   by class is, by 10 Feb 07:
>   Technician   43.75%

43.75% is a less than 50%.

>   Technician Plus   5.72%
>   Novice   4.11%
>   General   19.99%
>   Advanced   10.78%
>   Extra   15.66%
>
>   Technician and Technician Plus > together = 351,811 or 49.46%

49.46% is a less than 50%.

And you didn't write 'Technician and Technician
Plus together', Len old chap. You wrote:

"Technician class is now bigger than ALL other US license classes combined"

And it isn't.

Just for grins, suppose we consider the combined total of Technicians and Technician Pluses.

711,274 total individual USA amateur radio licensees
minus 351,811 Technicians and Tech Pluses
leaves 359,463 individual USA amateur radio licensees
of all other license classes combined.

359,463 is 7,652 more than 351,811. So even if we consider Techs and Tech pluses as Techs, they do not outnumber all other license classes.

So the claim

"Technician class is now bigger than ALL other US license classes combined"

is simply not true. Not true at all. Not even close -
and using your numbers!

>   50% of 711,274 is exactly 355,637
> or 3,826 more than 351,811.

Which proves that your claim was just plain wrong, Len.

>   If this sissy-fuss wants to keep rolling his

You made the error, Len. I simply pointed it out.

Yet you act like I'm doing something wrong..

So what?

You still got the facts wrong, Len.

That's not the point, Len. I know that better than you do, from posting the ARS license numbers twice a month.

Yet they still do not outnumber all other license classes combined.

How many of those 32 per day are new licenses, and how many are Tech Pluses renewed as Technicians?

>   Cranky has many times tried to rationalize that the

Where?

Show us where that was claimed.
If it has been said many times, you should be able to prove it easily.

But I think you are mistaken - again.

> but, again,
>   the numbers never fitted his "explanation." However,

Len, you are the crankiest one here. Are you referring to yourself in the third person?

>   Upgraders are those already licensed who are

FCC has been renewing Tech Pluses as Techs since April 15, 2000. That's one reason the number of Technicians keeps growing. Yet the number of Techs does not exceed the number of all other license classes combined, even after almost 7 years.

Maybe.

Or maybe they'd be coming in by another route. US amateur radio had many periods of growth before there was a license without a code test.

Soon we will see what the effect of total elimination of the Morse Code test will be. Perhaps there will be more growth - or perhaps not. I will post the numbers in either case.

But regardless of all that, Len, the number of Technicians does not exceed the number of all other license classes combined - even if Tech Pluses are counted as Technicians.

All your shouting, name calling and attempted diversions
do not change that.

Jim, N2EY

Any man who admits to having sex with another man is gay.
You define yourself as being bisexual.

I don't know anyone who visits Post Office Boxes anywhere. I might go to a post office for stamps or to mail a parcel, but I've never gone for the purpose of visiting a P.O. Box.

Where've you been? Mark describes Morse Code as torture. He doesn't miss an opportunity to slam the mode or to say that it should be outlawed. Mark's "special." He is a victim.

I don't know what you're reading. Morse Code exams test for a certain

Which statement is incorrect? Is it the one where I tell him that there'll be no "CODE victory". The removal of a Morse Code test doesn't sound like any sort of "CODE victory" to me.

Perhaps it was my statement advising Mark that I'd tell him where to stick it, but that I understand that the term isn't an insult to him.

seems illogical. How does one stalk in a public forum? As to documentation try this

Go to www.qrz.com

type in N0IMD and this is what you get

Brian P Burke
430 Longview St
Pickerington OH 43147
USA

now go to:

http://www-p.switchboard.com/_1_2STRTRH03MOI74G__swbd.main/dir/whitepage.htm

type in Burke and Pickerington, OH
this is what you get:

Brian Burke
(614) 833-0979 | 430 Longview St Pickerington, OH 43147

so, where's the stalking little marcus clone??

feel free to report this proceed at your own risk. maybe a twitch of an index finger, or was it an ounce of pressure. perhaps a 2 x 4 and then picking your teeth up off the floor. which is your perferred method there

Brian Burke
(614) 833-0979 | 430 Longview St Pickerington, OH 43147

Would love to continue this but your are sounding more like Marcus, the professional handicapped drafted military whatever he porfesses he is Mark will forever be the innocent victim of the ARRL. According to Mark, and he wrings his hands often and regularly, the ARRL is out to get him in an attempt to stymie his wishes for a "free" license to operate on the HF bands.

I wonder if Mark demanded that the Michigan BMV issue him a Drivers License with no testing?

Hardly. The depth of depravity, maybe. Wisdom? No way.
Still flattering yourself, I see. You may as well...nobody else will.

Again, it is YOU who wears out the homo aspect to the point of nausea. Only you and Roger seem to be fixated upon where you stick your, um..."manhood".
Again, Mark. If you cannot stand the heat, stop advertising the fact that you are a bisexual Pagan in the blog sight that you openly advertise.

There are many who feel that being a depraved sexual oddity is your speciality, and rightfully so.
If you cannot stand the heat of criticism, go away.

For those who claim that Gav and I are not married, guess again. Gav is an artist. She does things her way and I do things my way. We don't need the signature of a Legal Authority to pronounce us man and man. Who needs a piece of parchment to bond us?

Gav and I swore fealty to one another over a warm cup of Goat milk while watching the Michigan sun set over our forty acres of wasteland.

Gav did not want to take my last name as her married name.

Why? Because we are not bound by civilian constraints as you know them. We are not actually married by your definition, but we are married in each other's eyes when I opened my front door and invited Gav in.

We pledged to remain together for as long as Gav can pay for half the utility bills. We have not yet had sex like men and women do, but if I can get over my dislike for the female vulva, I may take the plunge.

Meanwhile, Gav sleeps in the guest bedroom until I can talk her into joining me on the couch.

We are meant for each other.

He defined himself as gay way back in the 90's when he first showed up on this forum. You'd have to search thru google for the appropriate posting. I do not believe the posting was in this forum either, it was in a different forum like alt.arousal.spank.spank.spank a few of us ran across when we cross-referenced his posts by the email address he was using at the time.

Now he's making up lies about how he got a Hawaiin callsign.

Please do. I'd get a kick out of that.

But I've never had a problem with Dee, nor have I forwarded her emails to anyone.

I don't need to follow you. I only know what Jeff said. He regretted loaning you his KH6 PO Box address.

That would be you. Please move forward with your plan to expose me as

He had a problem with something you were doing, like faking up a bunch of radio clubs, etc. I never thought that faking up a radio club was against Part 97, but it just might have been a case of poor amateur practice when you got all those club calls for them. Sigh.

Welp, it never surprises me whan an Extra acts like he owns the ARS.

Wow! Can I quote you on that?

It's quite common for a military member to have a PO Box when stationed on Hawaii or Guam. To get your mail on a regular basis, you have to visit the PO Box regularly. Hermann is, or was, a military member. Mike Deignan plays one in the RF Commandos.

I'm as I've always been, and even collect my mail on a regular basis. The USPS doesn't like it when the mail backs up for lack of regular visits.

On another note, I don't revere world travelling DXers, such as yourself, who belittle other amateurs. It's prickish.

Why? Riley has been able to sniff out Mike's poor amateur practices without any help from me.

Gay. An Abomination.

By the fact that you claim to be married and claim to be "bi" changes nothing. You are still a Faggot.

You're beginning to act like Marcus seeing things evil things behind every corner

However, there was no threat at all Bry. Just repeating what was typed by your friend on the left coast. He's the one who repeated mentions ounces of finger pressure, 2 x4's to the head, picking teeth off the floor. Since you seem so aroused with what he sez, I figured you'd already have some thoughts on that

Oh, I see. I guess Robesin forced you to also put up a blog wherein you describe yourself as being a bisexual, Jewish, pagan. (and now, a racist) Everything that happens to you is always somebody else's fault, isn't it?

Simply put, you are a Goon, Mark.

I'm sure the "AG" uses the same phrase when he sees your return address on an envelope.

Too bad for you the phrase "poor amateur practice" never appears in any correspondence from Riley to me, huh? That must really go up your backside... Ooops... don't wanna get Mork all hot and bothered. Gotta watch what I say.

Don't worry, Brian, now that that nasty, pesky little code test, which has been holding you back for so many years, is gone, you too can someday be an Extra too.

I knew many of them and all of them got the proper written permission PLUS when they transitted they were in the proper portion of the amatuer bands based on' their license class. You, however, were most certainy transmitting outside your allocated frequencies, based upon your license class at the tiime. And since you are personally responsible for your own operationing it begs the question......

no it isn't this is a public forum you don't like what you read, don't read it don't reply to it ignore it and maybe it will go away

It's just like if you stood on a street corner there Bry and ranted and raved against someone. It;s no more harassment then this is.

If I decided to start e-mailing you or by ignoring your demands, start mailing you things, that would be harassment. BUT, don't worry, that would entail more effort than you are worth and would a considerable waste of time. Besides, I'd never get to "see" your reactions since they'd be behind closed doors. This forum is much better to yank your chains, ring your bell, etc etc etc I guess what Dave calls you..The Red Hatted Monkey, is true Hold out a penny and you'll jump and do all your tricks for us

Why not call the state authorities and complain I am sure they'll get right on the case. Maybe Pickerington CSI will handle it Maybe you and Robeson can get a special FBI group rate

I like you Bry.. you're not only funny, you can spell BUT I doubt you have a 249 IQ like Marcus of Michigan

Like Marcus, you're getting wearisome and tedious..off to the sewer file where you both belong

So, if I'd been a stay-at-home sort of guy, everything would be ducky, huh?

There are those who are belittled undeservedly. I like to withhold my belittlement of others until I find worthy targets--those who are snipers, those who repeatedly display their stupidity to the world, those who claim to be victims and those who, like Len Anderson, play sidewalk superintendent in areas in which they are not involved.

But, perhaps, the way to look at it is this forum is helping spare other amateurs around the globe from attempting to decypher Mark's gibberish. If his online contacts are anything like what he types in this forum, you'd get a headache within the first 30 seconds.

What's a staker?

Is that a Vampire Slayer?

Do I get to do the horizontal mombo with Sarah Michelle Gellar?

Is she a real blonde? Gentlemen prefer blondes, after all.

Or, is a staker someone who cooks steaks on the grill? Medium well on mine, please.

No, wait, that would be a steaker, not a staker. Never mind. No A1 steak sauce for you.

Nah, idiot. Extortion is when you sue the entire Catholic Diocese of Boston for consensual sex acts you had with priests 20 years ago.
Extortion also involves whores who use the abortable fetus in their wombs as a threat to any man who got them pregnant.
Extortion also involves illegally seizing peoples' property and demanding a ransom for its return.

W1AW Special Event, Midnight Exam Sessions to Mark New Amateur Rules

NEWINGTON, CT, Feb 9, 2007 -- As new Amateur Radio Service rules phase in Friday, February 23, eliminating the Morse code requirement, Hiram Percy Maxim Memorial Station W1AW will mark the milestone with a weekend-long special event. In addition, a number of Central Connecticut volunteer examiners will be on hand at ARRL Headquarters -- both before and after the new rules become effective at 12:01 AM EST -- to offer Amateur Radio examinations under both the current and new rules. ARRL Regulatory Information Specialist Dan Henderson, N1ND, is helping to coordinate the celebration. He says Headquarters staff and other volunteers will keep W1AW active for the "Welcome Weekend" event.

"W1AW will be on the air all weekend for this special event to celebrate the fact that so many amateurs have gained or will earn new privileges as a result of the rule changes," he said. "The station will operate starting at 12:01 AM Eastern Time on Friday, February 23, continuing into the wee hours and resuming operation during the day. Then W1AW will be on the air on both days of the weekend, from 10 AM until 5 PM -- perhaps longer as conditions and enthusiasm dictate."

Operation will be on both SSB and CW. W1AW operators will concentrate their activities on the Technician and General class HF subbands. On SSB, the station will use its normal phone frequencies -- 1.855, 3.990, 7.290, 14.290, 18.160 and 21.390 MHz. On 10 meters, W1AW will operate SSB on or about 28.480 MHz.

Henderson says operating will be casual unless pileups develop. "The purpose is to welcome newcomers to new privileges," he said.

"First Contact" certificates will be available as part of this event. ARRL invites anyone making a first contact or first HF contact to enter the contact information on the ARRL "Welcome Weekend" Web site and receive a certificate in return. "If the first contact is with W1AW we will also be including a W1AW QSL card for the contact," Henderson added.

The ARRL anticipates a huge influx of upgrade applications once the Morse code requirement disappears. In addition, all Technician licensees will have limited HF privileges starting February 23, whether or not they've passed a Morse code test.

Amateur Radio exam sessions both before and after the zero hour will offer an opportunity for applicants either to upgrade under the outgoing licensing rules at the last possible opportunity or under the new licensing rules at the first possible opportunity.

"Dual exam sessions are scheduled at ARRL Headquarters around the effective time of the new licensing rules," says Brennan Price, N4QX, a former ARRL staff member and an ARRL VEC volunteer examiner. "At 11 PM on February 22, a session will be held for candidates wishing to upgrade under the existing rules. A few folks have expressed interest in such a session." Price says all Amateur Radio written and telegraphy elements will be offered until midnight.

"At 12:01 AM February 23, a second session will begin under the new licensing rules," he said. "Examiners will not only be evaluating previously earned Certificates of Successful Completion of Exam (CSCEs) for upgrades, but will be offering all written elements." Two teams of volunteer examiners will be on site until all applicants have been served.

On or after February 23, applicants upgrading on the basis of a valid CSCE must present the certificate for element credit, fill out an application and pay any applicable exam session fee, which most VECs charge. Only after the VE team has issued a CSCE for upgrade credit may applicants actually use their new operating privileges on the air.

Additional Welcome Weekend information will be available on the ARRL Web site in the days leading up to February 23.

Well, I'm not sure of your point, but from the title of the post, you seem to be somewhat negative...("ARRL Now Only Wants...")

I don't think that's all they want, but more of a case of that's all there is, thanks to the FCC. The ARRL is just accepting the reality of the situation.

1) ANY organization generally wants to preserve itself (Gee, I know this comes as a big surprise). If due to FCC action (beyond the control of the ARRL), all that there is are new, no-code hams, why shouldn't the ARRL welcome them?

2) Read point one above again. This was an FCC action, beyond the control of the ARRL; the ARRL can welcome the newbies or put their tail between their legs and slink off into the night...

3) You ask "What happens to the rest of us?" I am sure the ARRL would be glad to welcome us as new members and/or keep us as existing members. Why would you suspect anything different?

No, I'm receiving any emails from Dee, and I'm not forwarding her postings to the attorney general's office. Dee and I can disagree all day long and she doesn't resort to calling people Homos, Pedos,

Extortion involves money, right?

How about reading what extortion is instead of acting as if free speech is not legal.
Also, everyone knows the wimpo criminal agenda to levy false charges against people who were only acting in a just manner to defend themselves or another.
All gay males are at risk of being killed via the legal use of lethal force because of their great seropositive status if they are found attempting to infect another person.
Such an act is not a hate crime directed at gays.
It is an act of self-defense against persons who are threatening the life and/or lives of others.

According to the law, you are in error.

So, you know the Fourth Amendment?
Why do cops impound vehicles and hold them at ransom if such an act is a crime?
Can't they actually do some work instead of parading around with guns in their hands in an organzied crime syndicate at tax-payer expense?
Sure is funny how they need all the sophisticated equipment to perform their crimes againt the people, isn't it?
LOL!
Everyone is laughing at the crime ring syndicate which is operated in contradiction to the Constitution and with tax dollars.
Why do cops take possessions of the public, fail to return them, and then hide out in places far from the areas they patrol?
Forgot about the peoples' Constitutional right to bear arms already?

So, you mean there was no extortion at all since nothing of value was demanded when someone exercised their right to free speech.

Can you ignore him?
If he has an FCC license, too, he has just as much right to speak his words as you do on his radio.
Surely, you can block another frequency from your radio, right?
It isn't hard to filter usenet or emails either.
As far as the US mail I think all you have to do is put RTS on anything he sends you.
I looked at the link and I didn't see anything because it was a bit too lengthy to retain my interest in searching it. Sometimes blogs are so esoteric they are not of much interest to the majority of people anyway.

I am not sure of the intimidation.
All I see here is vague accusations without evidence at this point.
Why would anyone want to do such to you anyway?
Verbal bashing is different from physical acts.
Threats are a different story, I know.
And, they are not comfortable. I can attest to having been struck before by someone who was trying to coerce me into performing what many would call a homosexual act when I was a teenager.
I did not appreciate that one bit.
To me that is 'gay bashing' because a gay person did it to me.

CHEPACHET, RI: The FCC on December 18, 2000, wrote Amateur Extra licensee Michael P. Deignan, KH6HZ, regarding "at least eight club call signs in your name as trustee." Six show Rhode Island addresses; four indicate Hawaii addresses. FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth noted that all of the call signs were granted in the same month. All are WH6-prefix call signs.
Hollingsworth said the person whose address was listed for the club call signs in Hawaii has notified the FCC that he does not want to be associated with the club call signs and does not want his address to be used. Hollingsworth requested that Deignan justify the need for each of the call signs and provide details of members, meeting times, and meeting minutes for each club. Hollingsworth also asked Deignan to list any other call signs issued to him that were not included in the FCC letter. Hollingsworth said the FCC intends to cancel all of the listed call signs unless it receives a satisfactory response within 30 days.

I wonder who'se address that was? I wonder why that address holder didn't want his address to be used?

I wonder why Mike can't be honest about his grab for a bunch of domestic and Hawaiin callsigns?

I will agree that there are many terms now that do not seem to be traditional terms.
Maybe if you can find out exactly why all this is happening you can assure whoever is 'bashing' you that things are ok now.
I am so uncertain of all the details.
Why anyone would have that much animosity towards any one individual is quite unfamiliar to me.
I do not think there are that many people nowadays in the USA that haven't experienced some malevent in their lives.
Hopefully, we can all learn to respect one another and learn to understand what it is that will keep us all from 'bashing' one another.
One of the best ideas I know of is the Golden Rule.
Sometimes that rule isn't as easy to follow if you have been harmed by another person.

otehr Ham that knows CW and the newbies wont understand what your

Sir,

Is everything ok?
I am wondering if there is anything that can be done to bring peace, a resolution, to the apparent quandary you are facing.

Sniff sniff, boo-hoo for you.

No mention of the words "poor amateur practice" or "regret" in those quotes, are there?

Please play again soon!

Punctuation is back, but incorrect. How's that vein? Is your head

I can't see around corners, and I can't see you. All I know is what you've typed, and you typed a threat.

You need to put that in quotes, then. Since you didn't, it was your words threatening me.

I saw no quotes or mentions of anyone else. Just a threat from you.

Lots of 6-land hams. See Condor Net, a private but OPEN repeater chain that goes from north of the Bay Area down to southern California, branches off to Nevada and Arizona. NO computerized control of those repeaters, just tone signalling to get anywhere using simple analog-digital decoding and control. One of the first BIG amateur repeater networks anywhere.

The way I see it, ARRL is busy, busy doing damage-repair for years of toadying to the brass pounders. They are trying to satisfy both sides of the code test issue...and wind up satisfying NO ONE.

Naturally! :-) [even though Radio News (old title) had been around in 1948...:-)]

As to the "first" creator of the "walkie-talkie," I found a nice, detailed description about a Canadian, Donald Hings, VE7BH,
P.Eng, M.B.E., C.M. (Order of Canada to you yanks). I will credit Hings as the first in 1937. See a web page titled "Walk the Talk, Talk the Walkie-Talkie" by his grandson.

The Canadian CE-58 that resulted from that commercial portable transmitter-receiver was about on par with the US SCR-194 and SCR-195. Big and bulky by today's standards, but good to reach out lots of miles.

The US SCR-194 (27-52 MHz) and SCR-195 (52-65 MHz) were both super-regen receivers, modulated oscillator structures, "VFO" in tuning. The "line" officers of the US Army didn't like them and invited a group of civilian engineers from Galvin in Chicago (later Motorola) to observe maneuvers and ask them if they could come up with something better. The result was the low-HF SCR-536, the FIRST "handie-talkie" for the US Army.
About 40 thousand were produced. Galvin would later design and sell the SCR-300 VHF FM backpack portable that went into battle first in Italy in 1943.

Spanky seems intent on making a Big Deal out of Al Gross.
Probably about the "romance" of "Joan-Elenor spy radios."
Spanky never was in any military and can only get vicarious thrills out of reading of the mysterious 'black' doings.
Gross did good in his lifetime and did do SOME firsts.
Hings had 75 patents as sole inventor, 5 more a co-inventor.

As to hand-helds ("handie-talkie"), the US Army was first with the SCR-536 from Motorola. A super-regen and modulated oscillator was old hat in the late 1940s, having been done at least 15 years earlier many places. The SCR-536 was a crystal-controlled superhet receiver with modulated PA from a crystal-oscillator, some 40 thousand were used until replaced by the AN/PRC-6. The Gross commercial 460 MHz handie-talkie is notable only for the fact it went up that high in frequency when it was introduced. By the way, Gross' Citizens Band Communications company must have gone down the tubes by 1957 since he left them then and went to work for another corporation. One year short of the 11m CB Order from the FCC.

This homie don' play no games wid him...

If Spanky wants to say that 49.46% is NOT EXACTLY 50% then he would be technically right, but ten kinds of WRONG on judging people. Note: Rounding off 49.46% to two integers IS 50%!

N2-D2 is a cousin of R2-D2. Cranky isn't related to C3P0. Has no gold finish regardless. But IS robotic.

Ya know, if one takes an EXACT-frequency color-burst xtal and puts the oscillations into a 16 flip-flop chain of dividing by 59,659, the chain output will be 60.000 091 4 Hz. That is off EXACT 60 Hz by 1.5238 PPM. If that is divided down more for a clock, the clock will be off only 131.656 mS per day, gaining not quite 1 second per week (actually +0.921594 Sec). Spanky would jump up and down on such accuracies as "WRONG!" "NOT FACTUAL!" Or other dumb shit.

My Lacrosse radio wrist-watch is accurate to one second plus/minus per day, thanks to the 60 KHz time signal from Fort Collins, CO. Probably "not good enough" for Cranky Spanky... There's just NO satisfyin' these cry babies.

You just can't help but stick your foot in the bucket, Leonard. The amateur allocation is 222-225 MHz. Digital forwarding is permitted to all but Novice Class licensees in 219-220 MHz on a secondary basis.

You made another factual error.

At least the League needn't worry about satisfying Leonard H. Anderson.
You aren't involved in either amateur radio or the American Radio Relay League.

The way you see it--Sheesh!

Well, if it isn't Dick Tracy! I think that's about as close to amateur radio as you'll get.

That's right.

But your claim was that Technicians outnumbered
all other license classes combined.

They don't.

50.54% is more than 49.46%, Len.

You asked:

"Don't you realize that Technician class is now bigger than ALL other US license classes combined?"

And I replied:

I don't realize it, because it's not true.

And it isn't.

No, Len, it's not.

Rounding off 49.46% to two integers is 49%.

If he really was there, then he had no use for Jeff's PO Box. He could have used the address where he was staying or rented his own PO Box.

You, of course, have evidence that this is not true. You began writing of visiting someone's P.O. Box.

How do you know?

When I left the U.S, I changed my licensing address with the FCC to that of WA8JOC. The FCC requires me to provide an address where I can be reached by mail. The address I provided accomplished that. During the intervening years I was at that address at times. Most of the time I was not there. When I returned to the U.S, I changed my address to the one where I now reside. At no time did I visit a Post Office Box in Cincinnati or here. At no time was your input or approval required.

An area newspaper usually contains at least 1 story a week where the police had to break up a "love tryst" in a men's bathroom at a local bar, etc.

Perhaps he's hoping you'll visit a similar bathroom so he can show you his "hot ham"?

Be careful Dave, Brian who thinks the phrase "You've got mail" is a threat will soon report you as well, so paid heed

Come to think of it, seems to me both trained monkeys (Bry and his trained Chimp, Marcus of MI) both advocate violence against others.

If I remember both trained monkeys have accused others of condoning bad behavior by not speaking out against such behavior. I paraphrase, "If you are silent on the matter, you must be for it" Never once did it cross their limited brain cases, that by ignoring such behavior, it goes away...sort of like what most people do on various repeaters when jammer type try to get a rise out of the users. Oh that's right, Bry is against repeaters because the owners ask for money to help pay the expenses and keep them on the air and Bry feels it illegal to ask for money to help pay for the expense to help keep a repeater on the air. I remember reading that..Anyway

Jim thinks it's OK for Steve Robenson's abhorrent behavior because he never says anything to condemn it. Marcus thinks everyone against him because no one speaks up for him. If you're silent you approve

Bry thinks it's OK for that elderly person on the left coast (Bry's trainer) to threaten everyone with "ounces of finger pressure", 2 x 4's to the heat and having others picking up their teeth because not once did he every condemn such talk, therefore he must Condon it. The elderly person from the left coast seems to repeatedly belittle military veterans, yet Bry never speaks out against such talk, therefore, based on the Bry and Marcus logic, their silence must Condone and not condemn

I guess that's what you can except from trained monkeys. Cling cling Bry, another penny hits the sidewalk Feel free to report me

And don't forget a banana for your trained monkey..Marcus of MI

So in conclusion, be careful what you say here Dave, Maruc will accuse of gay-bashing and Bry will think you are threatening him The 2 of them seem so sympatico, a kindred spirit if you will. Speaks volumes for for both them, a 0 and a 9 in 8.

I'm not sure I understand your statement. If you really mean the "ARRL want's only nocode hams" then you must believe all hams that have passed the code test will no longer be welcome at the ARRL and memberships will not be renewed. Do you really believe that?

Lets not forget the ARRL and it's aging membership really has no choice when it comes to accepting hams that have passed all currently required tests. The ARRL should make plans for liquidation if they choose otherwise.

> And as

What do the rest of you (hams that passed a morse code test) want from the ARRL. Would they like to retake the code test as a measure of defiance? Maybe a bordered certificate suitable for framing that proclaims: I Passed The Code Test at (insert speed). And I Practiced
This Long (insert number of times code tapes replayed).

For heavens sake why offer the test under the old rules at the 11th hour? Reads like the ARRL is encouraging a "We vs They" mentality among the old guard. What's next...will the no code licensees have a special marker on their QST address label?

"So paid heed?" :-)

Heil, why are you talking to yourself as if you were another person? And why can't you make phrases and use correct words like your parochial school Nun told you was "proper?"

>Come to think of it, seems to me both trained monkeys (Bry and his trained >Chimp, Marcus of MI) both advocate violence against others.

Oh, my, there is NO GREATER trained monkey than the little red-hatted one who dances whenever Cranky Spanky grinds his "factual error" organ.

NO ONE in here can top the Grand Champion K4YZ on THREATS OF VIOLENCE! Absolutely NO ONE! :-)

>Jim thinks it's OK for Steve Robenson's abhorrent behavior because he never >says anything to condemn it.

"Robenson?" Someone in here is a "Robenson?" :-)

Cranky only knows olde-tyme hamme raddio and doesn't approve of any other kind...he has the certificates (suitable for framing) on his walls to prove it. [friends and neighbors (all one of them) come over to praise and admire them]

"Marcus?" Davidus, you are talking to yourself again...

Poor baby Davidus, can't remember Major Dud's remarks made in here before he joined CAP? Back when he was the "Seven Hostile Action" HE-RO of his mythical USMC? :-)

"Ounces of finger pressure" were what Major DUD wrote. That was after he couldn't cow anyone by "signing" his posts
"Steve and the Boys." :-)

"Taking a 2x4 to a 1x2" is an old phrase of mine, done in here years ago. But, Davidus Heilius, you weren't here years ago, were you? [you were busy, busy teaching Huns
how to spell, weren't you?]

By the way, Davidus, how does one "Condon" something? Are you referring to the elastic covering you put on before posting in here?

Practice safe eating, use condiments.

>The elderly person from the >left coast seems to repeatedly belittle military veterans, yet Bry never >their silence must Condone and not condemn

Awwww..."elderly person?" Hell yes, I've been on this planet for longer than most in here. Poor baby, too bad you'll never make the grade...not with your attitude. :-)

"Belittle military veterans?" :-) Not me, Davidus.
I'm proud to have done my 8 years of military service and salute ANY military veteran who doesn't act like a "superior" LYING asshole. Wanna see how I "belittle" military service? Just go to:

http://sujan.hallikainen.org/BroadcastHistory/uploads/My3Years.pdf

You could also go the Pacific Stars and Stripes military newspaper and read my interview by staffer Rick Chernitzer, but it is probably beyond your limited ability to access their public archives.

Now you just make noise to "Seven hostile actions" HE-RO
Steven James Robeson and ask to see ANY official document copies he has about His "military service." Go ahead, ask him if you dare. [you won't, punk, you ain't got the guts...all you got is mouth] NONE of us in here have ever seen any, so you could be a "first!"

>I guess that's what you can except from trained monkeys.

"...you can EXCEPT?" :-)

"Trained monkeys:" Best example is little red-hatted K8MN allatime rattling his tin cup whenever N2EY grinds his "factual error" organ. :-) Bank on it, they are sooooo predictable!

Oh, yeah, there's the FAKE "Hawaiian resident" KH6HZ, another "hostile action" HE-RO who managed to get a fancy Hawaiian callsign courtesy of the conspiracy with Jeffrey Herman to use Herman's P.O. Box in Hawaii. Watch out, "RF Commando Leader" Deignan will spank you with his IRS return copies showing you "large income" or maybe hit you with an oar from his speedboat "Effluvia." :-)

All these "superior" 20-WPM-tested AMATEUR morsemen are soooooo expert on AMATEUR things. Just ask N2EY about anything to do with military radio (or just military anything) even though he never once served in the military...or even in any government post. He would be great (or rather grate) as an ossifer being a 30-second wonder. You gotta love ALL of those because you fit their mould (or mold) just fine.

Those "superiors" just make ya wanna go out an' JOIN UP in the AMATEUR radio SERVICE, doesn't it? When ARE YOU going to join up and become a federally-authorized radio station, using that callsign as your "name"?

Wurst regards you little anony-mouse weenie,

Mark, it isn't safe to correct the "reknowned amateur historian."

He might put on his Habit and spank your knuckles with her ruler.

Once in a while one must deliberately insert a "wrong" phrase to make them happy. They are happiest when they feel they are "superior." :-)

Poor guy (or whatever) is just unhappy about LOSING the R&O. We all have to do our part in trying to make them happy and content in their "superiority."

Yank, yank, push, push, oh what a relief they get... :-)

You weren't spanked. You were likened to a well known comic strip character who also has a wrist radio. That was followed by a statement which may show me to be prescient.

You certainly are.

As you've been told, Leonard, there's no one here more cranky than you.

I didn't bring up visiting a men's room, Mr. Cheese (who is Brian?) did. You seem interested in the topic too. I responded to a post about Post Office boxes and I was flabbergasted when the talk turned to men's rooms.

Have a nice day.

REQUEST FOR DISCUSSION (RFD)
rec.radio.amateur.moderated

This is a formal Request For Discussion (RFD) for the creation of the moderated Usenet newsgroup, rec.radio.amateur.moderated.

PROCEDURE:

The B8MB plans to begin voting on this proposal after five days. Please offer any final discussion or comments before the end of this waiting period. Voting may take up to one week (7 days); a result will be posted following the end of the voting period.

All discussion of this proposal should be posted to news.groups.proposals.

The full group creation procedure is documented here:

http://www.big-8.org/dokuwiki/doku.php?id=policies:proposals

NEWSGROUPS LINE: rec.radio.amateur.moderated

rec.radio.amateur.moderated Amateur radio practices, rules, etc. (Moderated)

SUMMARY OF DISCUSSION:

The proposal in its current form reflects the results of feedback from posters to news.groups.proposals in response to the 1st and 2nd RFD's and a Straw Poll. It is also, realistically, a reflection of what Big-8 board members - including Tim Skirvin, Steve Bonine, and Kathy Morgan - indicated that they would support, and vote for.

Followup discussion in response to the 1st RFD indicated that there was significant and strongly-held opinions in favor of either opening up the proposed newsgroup to all amateur radio topics, or changing the name to reflect a misc+policy scope only. In addition to the rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy newsgroups, there has also been recent discussion about moderation in rec.radio.amateur.antenna and rec.radio.amateur.dx. As a result, pointers to the 2nd RFD were posted to those additional newsgroups. In particular, some consensus about alternatives was actively solicited at that time. The main alternatives suggested in the 2nd RFD were:

1. Make rec.radio.amateur.moderated an all-encompassing moderated amateur radio discussion newsgroup.

2. Keep the topics focused on misc and policy, and come up with a better name for the proposed misc+policy moderated amateur radio discussion newsgroup.

Alternative #2 then would branch out to two possible outcomes:

2.a. Create additional moderated newsgroups for other topics, like .antenna and .dx, now or in the future.

2.b. No one steps forward to create additional moderated newsgroups, and the other topics continue unmoderated.

Alternative #1 would not rule out the creation of additional moderated newsgroups in the future, though there is the valid point that alternative #2 would fix the name-space problem immediately for future growth, and would not have to be revisited.

Alternative #2 would require a suitable name. The name of rec.radio.amateur.misc+policy.moderated was suggested by Kathy Morgan.

One argument offered by the proponent in favor of alternative #1 was that it may not be realistic to expect that, even if strongly desired, additional moderated newsgroups for other topics would emerge anytime soon, or at all.

No one from the rec.radio.amateur.antenna or rec.radio.amateur.dx newsgroup communities stepped forward to express a desire to create moderated newsgroups for those topics in response to the 2nd RFD inviting them to do so. Nor was there significant or widely-shared objection to the proposed new moderated newsgroup covering those topics also.

Creation of an all-encompassing moderated amateur radio newsgroup is consistent with the findings of a Straw Poll in news.groups.proposals, where approximately 60% of respondents were in the categories of
"Support initial name, no stated preference for scope" or "Support initial name and all-amateur-radio scope. Trying to characterize or summarize the opinions of those who might have been leaning towards a misc+policy scope proved difficult, and resulted in two respondents out of 21 polled (Jim Riley and Kathy Morgan) following up to clarify their own positions and correct their categorization in the Straw Poll. Jim indicated that he should be moved to the Straw Poll category of "Support initial name, no stated preference for scope," instead. Kathy indicated that she would support a proposal where the newsgroup name matched the scope. No one who was initially categorized in the Straw Poll as,
"Support initial name, no stated preference for scope," or, "Support initial name and all-amateur-radio scope," followed up to news.groups.proposals to object to their own categorization. Because of all of this, the alternative of a misc+policy-only newsgroup was not seen as one that could gain political traction, broad readership support, or majority Big-8 board support.

Less than 15% of respondents expressed objection to the creation of a moderated newsgroup entirely. None of these respondents objected to their categorization in the Straw Poll.

The rec.radio.amateur.equipment and rec.radio.amateur.homebrew newsgroups are being added to the distribution of a pointer to this 3rd RFD as a courtesy, and for their information. They were not added previously because the existence or form of a moderated discussion newsgroup was not seen by the proponents or most of the RFD discussion participants as something that would seriously affect them. Nor has there been any significant discussion in the recent past for making moderated alternatives for those topics, either specifically or generally, on the newsgroups. Making them aware of this 3rd RFD, and the opportunity to object during this Last Call for Comments, was seen as a reasonable compromise between informing them as a courtesy versus not subjecting them to unwelcome amounts of off-topic meta-discussion.

rec.radio.amateur.moderated is a moderated alternative to at least the existing rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy newsgroups. The rec.radio.amateur.misc newsgroup is chartered to discuss amateur ("ham") radio practices, contents, events, rules, etc., including anything related to amateur radio not specifically covered by another rec.radio.amateur.* newsgroup. The rec.radio.amateur.policy newsgroup is chartered to discuss ham radio rules, regulations, and policy. Over the past several years, the traffic on both groups has become largely flame wars, spam, and personal ad-hominem discussions of past, present, and future violations and violators, having little or no bearing on amateur radio. Polite requests by serious group posters to the offenders to refrain from such behavior have not resulted in elimination of such behavior and has in fact resulted in another series of flame wars. As a result, many knowledgeable and concerned posters in both groups have ceased being active therein.

Prior to the deterioration of rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy, both groups had active discussion of their chartered topics. It is expected that offering a moderated group will persuade those who formerly participated to resume their participation in rational, focussed, and informed discussion. Proper moderation will enable serious postings to the group to remain on topic while not limiting who can voice opinions or what opinions can be voiced.

Creating a single moderated newsgroup, one that would also permit all other amateur radio topics, is offered as the most practical solution for both the moderators and the participants at this time. The existing unmoderated newsgroups under rec.radio.amateur.* can, and likely will, continue with their present topics and message traffic independent of this new moderated newsgroup.

CHARTER:

rec.radio.amateur.moderated is for the discussion of amateur ("ham") radio, also known as the Amateur Radio Service, as defined in Federal Communications Commission Regulations and U.S. Law (47 CFR Part 97), and in similar laws and regulations in other countries, based on international treaty. It is not limited to the rules of any one country or time period. Possible topics include past, present, and future operating practices; events; contests; past, present, and potential-future rules; power limitations; authorized frequencies; allowed modes and band plans (or other gentlemen's agreements) that govern how we are to operate; what constitutes the acceptable operation of amateur stations.

The newsgroup is intended to be international in scope, not just for amateurs in the United States. It is, however, intended as an English-language forum, by custom and practice. As with General Aviation and other internationally-scoped endeavors, the Amateur Radio Service has a strong custom of the use of English and the Latin alphabet. Discussion of amateur radio in languages other than English also occurs in many country- and region-specific hierarchies, many of which have specific amateur radio newsgroups, including:

de.* (Germany)
dk.* (Denmark)
es.* (Spain)
fr.* (France)
nl.* (Netherlands)
pl.* (Poland)
pt.* (Portugal)
relcom.* (Russia)

This newsgroup is only intended to supplement, not supersede, any other amateur radio newsgroups.

General communications law or government policy of various government agencies is also on-topic, as long as the discussion relates to amateur radio. Examples would be emergency communications, local antenna restrictions, and property deed restrictions applying to operation of amateur radio stations.

Discussion of other types of radio, such as Citizens Band, Broadcast, other Personal Radio Services, Commercial or Private Land Mobile, and Marine or Aviation services are off-topic, except when directly related to amateur radio. Similarly, discussion of methods violating applicable communications law and regulations concerning radio equipment or operations are off-topic.

The following are prohibited:

* Personal advertisements (submitters of such articles will be referred to rec.radio.swap, instead).
* Commercial advertisements and money-making schemes.
* Chain letters.
* Posts in HTML.
* EMP spam.

* Binaries, apart from PGP signatures, X-Face headers, and other

REQUEST FOR DISCUSSION (RFD)
rec.radio.amateur.moderated

This is a formal Request For Discussion (RFD) for the creation of the moderated Usenet newsgroup, rec.radio.amateur.moderated.

PROCEDURE:

The B8MB plans to begin voting on this proposal after five days. Please offer any final discussion or comments before the end of this waiting period. Voting may take up to one week (7 days); a result will be posted following the end of the voting period.

All discussion of this proposal should be posted to news.groups.proposals.

The full group creation procedure is documented here:

http://www.big-8.org/dokuwiki/doku.php?id=policies:proposals

NEWSGROUPS LINE: rec.radio.amateur.moderated

rec.radio.amateur.moderated Amateur radio practices, rules, etc. (Moderated)

SUMMARY OF DISCUSSION:

The proposal in its current form reflects the results of feedback from posters to news.groups.proposals in response to the 1st and 2nd RFD's and a Straw Poll. It is also, realistically, a reflection of what Big-8 board members - including Tim Skirvin, Steve Bonine, and Kathy Morgan - indicated that they would support, and vote for.

Followup discussion in response to the 1st RFD indicated that there was significant and strongly-held opinions in favor of either opening up the proposed newsgroup to all amateur radio topics, or changing the name to reflect a misc+policy scope only. In addition to the rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy newsgroups, there has also been recent discussion about moderation in rec.radio.amateur.antenna and rec.radio.amateur.dx. As a result, pointers to the 2nd RFD were posted to those additional newsgroups. In particular, some consensus about alternatives was actively solicited at that time. The main alternatives suggested in the 2nd RFD were:

1. Make rec.radio.amateur.moderated an all-encompassing moderated amateur radio discussion newsgroup.

2. Keep the topics focused on misc and policy, and come up with a better name for the proposed misc+policy moderated amateur radio discussion newsgroup.

Alternative #2 then would branch out to two possible outcomes:

2.a. Create additional moderated newsgroups for other topics, like .antenna and .dx, now or in the future.

2.b. No one steps forward to create additional moderated newsgroups, and the other topics continue unmoderated.

Alternative #1 would not rule out the creation of additional moderated newsgroups in the future, though there is the valid point that alternative #2 would fix the name-space problem immediately for future growth, and would not have to be revisited.

Alternative #2 would require a suitable name. The name of rec.radio.amateur.misc+policy.moderated was suggested by Kathy Morgan.

One argument offered by the proponent in favor of alternative #1 was that it may not be realistic to expect that, even if strongly desired, additional moderated newsgroups for other topics would emerge anytime soon, or at all.

No one from the rec.radio.amateur.antenna or rec.radio.amateur.dx newsgroup communities stepped forward to express a desire to create moderated newsgroups for those topics in response to the 2nd RFD inviting them to do so. Nor was there significant or widely-shared objection to the proposed new moderated newsgroup covering those topics also.

Creation of an all-encompassing moderated amateur radio newsgroup is consistent with the findings of a Straw Poll in news.groups.proposals, where approximately 60% of respondents were in the categories of "Support initial name, no stated preference for scope" or "Support initial name and all-amateur-radio scope. Trying to characterize or summarize the opinions of those who might have been leaning towards a misc+policy scope proved difficult, and resulted in two respondents out of 21 polled (Jim Riley and Kathy Morgan) following up to clarify their own positions and correct their categorization in the Straw Poll. Jim indicated that he should be moved to the Straw Poll category of "Support initial name, no stated preference for scope," instead. Kathy indicated that she would support a proposal where the newsgroup name matched the scope. No one who was initially categorized in the Straw Poll as, "Support initial name, no stated preference for scope," or, "Support initial name and all-amateur-radio scope," followed up to news.groups.proposals to object to their own categorization. Because of all of this, the alternative of a misc+policy-only newsgroup was not seen as one that could gain political traction, broad readership support, or majority Big-8 board support.

Less than 15% of respondents expressed objection to the creation of a moderated newsgroup entirely. None of these respondents objected to their categorization in the Straw Poll.

The rec.radio.amateur.equipment and rec.radio.amateur.homebrew newsgroups are being added to the distribution of a pointer to this 3rd RFD as a courtesy, and for their information. They were not added previously because the existence or form of a moderated discussion newsgroup was not seen by the proponents or most of the RFD discussion participants as something that would seriously affect them. Nor has there been any significant discussion in the recent past for making moderated alternatives for those topics, either specifically or generally, on the newsgroups. Making them aware of this 3rd RFD, and the opportunity to object during this Last Call for Comments, was seen as a reasonable compromise between informing them as a courtesy versus not subjecting them to unwelcome amounts of off-topic meta-discussion.

rec.radio.amateur.moderated is a moderated alternative to at least the existing rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy newsgroups. The rec.radio.amateur.misc newsgroup is chartered to discuss amateur ("ham") radio practices, contents, events, rules, etc., including anything related to amateur radio not specifically covered by another rec.radio.amateur.* newsgroup. The rec.radio.amateur.policy newsgroup is chartered to discuss ham radio rules, regulations, and policy. Over the past several years, the traffic on both groups has become largely flame wars, spam, and personal ad-hominem discussions of past, present, and future violations and violators, having little or no bearing on amateur radio. Polite requests by serious group posters to the offenders to refrain from such behavior have not resulted in elimination of such behavior and has in fact resulted in another series of flame wars. As a result, many knowledgeable and concerned posters in both groups have ceased being active therein.

Prior to the deterioration of rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy, both groups had active discussion of their chartered topics. It is expected that offering a moderated group will persuade those who formerly participated to resume their participation in rational, focussed, and informed discussion. Proper moderation will enable serious postings to the group to remain on topic while not limiting who can voice opinions or what opinions can be voiced.

Creating a single moderated newsgroup, one that would also permit all other amateur radio topics, is offered as the most practical solution for both the moderators and the participants at this time. The existing unmoderated newsgroups under rec.radio.amateur.* can, and likely will, continue with their present topics and message traffic independent of this new moderated newsgroup.

CHARTER:

rec.radio.amateur.moderated is for the discussion of amateur ("ham") radio, also known as the Amateur Radio Service, as defined in Federal Communications Commission Regulations and U.S. Law (47 CFR Part 97), and in similar laws and regulations in other countries, based on international treaty. It is not limited to the rules of any one country or time period. Possible topics include past, present, and future operating practices; events; contests; past, present, and potential-future rules; power limitations; authorized frequencies; allowed modes and band plans (or other gentlemen's agreements) that govern how we are to operate; what constitutes the acceptable operation of amateur stations.

The newsgroup is intended to be international in scope, not just for amateurs in the United States. It is, however, intended as an English-language forum, by custom and practice. As with General Aviation and other internationally-scoped endeavors, the Amateur Radio Service has a strong custom of the use of English and the Latin alphabet. Discussion of amateur radio in languages other than English also occurs in many country- and region-specific hierarchies, many of which have specific amateur radio newsgroups, including:

de.* (Germany)
dk.* (Denmark)
es.* (Spain)
fr.* (France)
nl.* (Netherlands)
pl.* (Poland)
pt.* (Portugal)
relcom.* (Russia)

This newsgroup is only intended to supplement, not supersede, any other amateur radio newsgroups.

General communications law or government policy of various government agencies is also on-topic, as long as the discussion relates to amateur radio. Examples would be emergency communications, local antenna restrictions, and property deed restrictions applying to operation of amateur radio stations.

Discussion of other types of radio, such as Citizens Band, Broadcast, other Personal Radio Services, Commercial or Private Land Mobile, and Marine or Aviation services are off-topic, except when directly related to amateur radio. Similarly, discussion of methods violating applicable communications law and regulations concerning radio equipment or operations are off-topic.

The following are prohibited:

* Personal advertisements (submitters of such articles will be referred to rec.radio.swap, instead).
* Commercial advertisements and money-making schemes.
* Chain letters.
* Posts in HTML.
* EMP spam.

* Binaries, apart from PGP signatures, X-Face headers, and other ancillary article meta-data.
* Forgery of valid e-mail addresses.
* Excessive morphing/nym-shifting.
* Copyright violations. Pointers to news articles, blogs, etc. on this topic are welcome but are required to comply with fair use standards.
* Personal attacks and flames, as defined by the moderation team.
* Advertising items and/or services for sale (also will be referred to rec.radio.swap).
* Links to "objectionable" web content, including pornographic sites, sites encouraging illegal activities, or sites deemed unacceptable by the moderation team. The moderation team will cursorily check the contents of specific links to confirm on-topic content, but acceptance for posting does not imply endorsement or approval of the entire present or future contents of that web site.

appealing moderator action.

A moderation robot will scan all submitted posts. Each post will be manual review. The moderator 'bot will enforce the following guidelines:

* Crossposting is generally not allowed, with the general exception of crossposts of bulletins, FAQ's, and other informational articles to rec.radio.info, rec.answers, and news.answers. Infrequent administrative crossposts may occasionally be allowed at the sole discretion of the moderator.

* Postings must be in plain text. In particular no HTML or mixed text and HTML posts will be allowed. Messages that are multipart/alternative will be automatically filtered to pass just the text/plain version to the newsgroup.

* No binary postings of any sort will be accepted. Exceptions will be made for cryptographic signatures and such.

* Messages must not have a 'Followup-To' header that points out of rec.radio.amateur.moderated (other than to "poster").

* Messages must not continue a thread that has been "closed" by the moderators.

Individual posters may be temporarily banned for consistently violating the group charter. Posters who feel that their posts have been unfairly rejected or banned, either for specific content or by a specific moderator, may appeal the decision. They may do so by contacting the Appeals Board, consisting of a rotating group of 2 or more moderators, at the Administrative Contact address below. The Board will discuss and vote on the appeal and respond within 14 days if the appeal is successful. The Board will also reply within 14 days to unsuccessful submitters of any appeal that is on-topic, reasoned, civilly stated, and is not substantially an attempt to revisit the subject matter and arguments of a previous unsuccessful appeal.

Multiple temporary bans, attempting to circumvent the ban, or abuse of the appeal system may result in a permanent ban.

Sorry, that is a SERIOUS FACTUAL ERROR!!!

Dividing 2 by 3 results in the decimal fraction 0.66666666666666...

That is NOT the Bible's reference to "the number of the beast."

Not true what you say about the ARRL. Amateur radio is only as good as the effort you put into it. If you can't do code, you cannot communicate with a huge subset of the amateur population. That is a fact. You never will be able to so until your learn code, FCC requirement or no FCC requirement. There is some DX you will never get, some countries you may never contact, many people you will never meet.

Some no-coders sound like the gay rights lobby: They seem to be trying to make no-code the "norm". "I want you to think I am normal". "I am as just good as you, I can do HF now, I can be a real 'Ham'". (Gays can get "married"). True by regulation, but not really in practice.

In the foreseeable future you will never truly be a ham until you can QSO in code; you will only hold a piece of paper authorizing you to communicate on HF. Don't shoot the messanger. Don't bother disagreeing with me; it is the large subset of the amateur base that you have to convince and, unfortunately, that will take a while to change IF it ever does change. When people are sick of SSB QRM or we cannot QSO by voice due to conditions, we can simply move to the CW sub-bands and you are left "holding the mike".

As Walter Cronkite used to say. "That's the way it is..." February 23, 2007.

Get over it already and move on. They ARE doing code too or can't you read?

Code is still used but it is not relevant today in testing any more.

You changed the subject to places you've never visited. I'm flabbergasted that you've never visited a PO Box or the men's room.

He's laughing at the Gertol class of amateurs like yourself. Don't bother disagreeing with him. His group WILL be a larger subset of the amateur base that you'll have to convince to not laugh at you and

I'm concerned about obsessed stalkers who are apparently following me around and are intimately familiar with my travel schedules, since those obsessed stalkers seem to "know" where I happen to be at any given time.

Well, I hardly know what "Gertol" is. Talking about senility, one of the first signs is forgetting how to spell.

The sooner that you bastards all realize that ham radio as you have known it is now ended and now getting a licence is much like pulling a prize envelope out of a Cracker-Jack Box the better you'll all be for it. Am I lying? It really don't matter anyway as kids today would rather be on Youtube or Myspace or AOL IM with their friends.

Ah yes but if you say that you just do not understand radio people. You cannot possibly have exprienced the fascination with the physics of skywave propagation or the joy of knowing how analog circuits work, antenna and transmission line science and just knowing that one has transmitted an EM wave that someone else 8K miles awys has received at the speed of light without help from a man-made infrasructure. It is waves, it is music, it is knowedge, it is dicovery, it is joy. We argue, we disagree, we flame, we sometimes hate each other, some of us are not licensed, some are CBers but we all share that common fascination that IT just cannot provide, as awesome in its own right it may be.

Hello? This is February 12, 2007. FACTUAL ERROR!!!

There's one little problem, "Stefan." Isn't ANY "Stefan Wolfe"
in the FCC CORES database. The best that can be found
are two Steven Wolfes:

Steven H. Wolfe, KC4UZW, Tech, FRN 0004408340
Steven B. Wolfe, KC9KTN, Tech, FRN 0016067183

www.qrz.com confirms that.

The only "CW sub-bands" that Techs have is a small sliver on the bottom of two VHF ham bands. Of course, all other classes can use those. <shrug> So?

Its not Riley I'm concerned about. Its stalkers from the midwest who appear to be following me around, claiming they know intimate details of my life, like where I've been... Probably has even stolen my credit card info and is impersonating me. Identity theft is a serious crime, ya know...

and engaging libel/slander

but point that you do not live on both side of the coutry and in HI as all at the same is hardly on par with Robeson claiming to know what I am eating on a day to day basis or his claim to know what kind of genital my wife has or his claim that his homosexaul lover then traveled to my home and I prefrom a sex act on him before his lover took a bath

you are just whining about having been caught at something get over it and you will feel better

Tsk, tsk. I've never "boasted" about being an amateur extra.
I've always said I don't have an amateur radio license. I've also always said I've had a Commercial Radiotelephone license since 1956 (test taken at an FCC Field Office, one sitting).
By the way, I am registered with the FCC CORES and have been since July 30, 2000. CORES is NOT exclusively for radio amateurs.

Haven't you been able to understand that in SEVEN YEARS?

Tsk, tsk, tsk. Must be the terrible sound of all that organ grinding you dance to...

which would be why he objects to droping the tests

Mark, ignore that old weenie. "Out of the box" has always been available when the FCC set regulations so that one did NOT have to wear radio training pants as a novice or "lesser" classes.

The old weenie is just trying some stupid, juvenile emotional-baggage "come back" because that's all he has left in his repertoire of "replies." He's tried the same macho-middle-school baggage thing with "years of interest and no ham
license." :-)

I've kept saying that my advocacy has always been to eliminate the morse code test from FCC licensing regs.
The FCC has finally, legally AGREED. Now all the morsemen are "unhappy" and are trying to take out their frustrations on those they think are "lesser" individuals. Boo hoo for them.

Having observed issues and changes in recent years, I think the question that has to be asked at some point is whether or not the ARRL should continue to attempt to influence rules, laws, etc. The money that they have to be spending on legal efforts, lobbying, etc has got to be significant. I think any objective observer would conclude that their ability to influence legislation, FCC rules, etc in recent years has been pretty dismal. Earlier in their history, the ARRL had the ability to do this. Times change. In today's world, the Imperial FCC chooses to do what it wants to do, selectively uses public comments that support their pre-determined outcomes, fails to enforce its own rules and is happy ignore factual data or public sentiment in the process. Resources may be better spent in providing new and different services to members rather than flush it down the commode under the banner of "fighting city hall."

I'm sorry, but I fail to see your point. "CW" can be used just about everywhere on amateur bands from 160m on up to sub-THz.

My remark was on "CW" ONLY. Where's your beef?

Why not? The ARRL is a private incorporated entity. As a legal entity in the USA they have every right to make themselves heard to our government.

>The money >that they have to be spending on legal efforts, lobbying, etc has got >to be significant.

"Significant" is a subjective word, isn't quantifiable.

Their IRS Returns show the amount they've spent on services from a professional lobbying group and a law firm. One of the law firm's partners is Chris Imlay, a member of the ARRL's high inner circle. ARRL's recent IRS Returns show a multi-million dollar PROFIT for their "non-profit" organization.

>I think any objective observer would conclude that >their ability to influence legislation, FCC rules, etc in recent years >has been pretty dismal.

The ARRL hasn't gotten carte blanche on what IT wanted, true. But, it was never a god of radio and really did NOT know what was "best" for US amateur radio...but it seemed to know "what was best" for the Leagues' inner commanders and their core membership.

>Earlier in their history, the ARRL had the ability to do this.

So, they've convinced you they did? :-)

Back in the 1920s and 1930s the League had trumped their organization competitors in the USA. At that time there was little in the way of citizens communicating quickly to DC and getting replies back. ARRL provided the opinion-courier services, a nice letter-head and all the appearance of "being important." It certainly didn't hurt that H.P.Maxim had personal resources to make trips to DC to do his lobbying efforts.

ARRL was able to (profitably enough) publish a monthly magazine (purportedly a 'membership' periodical) of special interest to radio amateurs. The IMAGE of "being all for amateur radio" took hold in the limited ham public eye. It stuck, rightly or wrongly. There were no real competitors in amateur radio publications before or just after WW2.

>Times change.

No kidding? :-)

The appearance of RIVAL publications soon after end of WW2 (CQ, 73) plus the 1960's "question authority" mood began to erode the League's carefully-manicured IMAGE. ARRL increased its efforts to present the authoritative "mission" of them knowing what was best for amateur radio...consistently that being "work DX on HF with CW." VHF and above was a dark, mysterious region to the League and they generally avoided that new area or just didn't bother much with such things...it wasn't "ham radio" as they knew it.

Once the Internet got going and the US government joined up, the common folk COULD talk to DC at the speed of light without any intermediaries to selectively sort/ sanction their words. No more did US radio amateurs have to go through their "district directors" to talk to Washington. The capitol began to "listen" more and more to citizens through the Internet.

The Internet didn't do it all. Before the 1991 public entrance of the www, there was already the movement to toss the code test with the creation of the no-code-test Technician class. That became LAW despite the efforts of the ARRL (which supposedly "knew what was best for ham radio") to stop it. Even before that, well before, the FCC was cognizant of morse code's diminishing use in the whole, wide world of radio communications.

Around 2000, the IARU was for a total rewrite of ITU-R Radio Regulation S25. With that would be removal of the necessity for administrations to test for morse code for any amateur radio license privileges below 30 MHz. ARRL was opposed to that. They remained opposed until WRC-03 was scheduled for Geneva, then they took a "neutral" stance in public just before the conference beginning. The ARRL inner circle was against dropping the code test for US amateur applicants but took on a better-PR appearance of "no comment." The S25 rewrite took place and was voted in. [ARRL can't vote on such ITU things, only "advise"]

Many countries dropped the code test for amateur licenses after WRC-03. The FCC was obliged to stay with the State Department - NTIA - FCC triumvirate representing the US adminstration. A new Petition for removing the code test didn't appear at the FCC until 2005. The ARRL was against it and wanted THEIR version, which HAD to include some code testing (the ARRL "knows what is best for ham radio"...and it was what THEY wanted).

>In today's world, the Imperial FCC >chooses to do what it wants to do, selectively uses public comments Sourness Alert! Sour grapes time! It is rather obvious that YOU favor continued code testing and think you are in some "majority" in regards to that.

The FCC isn't "imperial." It is (now) an independent agency of the Administration of the United States, created in 1934. [I was then two years old and you did not exist] With all the radio services it must, by law, regulate now, it does not "favor" amateur radio. What the FCC did do was simply go the course as with all other Petitions, allowing time for Comments (even extending that time twice), then considered ALL those Comments for full year before deciding. Specific things they considered are well described in the body of FCC 06-178.

If there is ANY organization in the USA that is "imperial"
then it is that of the ARRL. They ignored world opinion, toadied to their core membership (olde-tyme morsemen), and simply ignored the majority. They didn't worry. Their publications were giving them a multi-million dollar a year PROFIT for their "non-profit" activities. They believed in their own propaganda and loved the life of "leadership." They still didn't try to entice the HUGE Technician class licensee group...until AFTER 06-178 was announced. AFTER. They aren't fools and know that a sustained League existance requires NEW membership. If existing license are EXPIRING at a rate of 78 a day but NEW licensees represent only 32 a day, they don't have to be mathematicians to realize numbers are shrinking.
Newcomers have - by far - come into US amateur radio
through the no-code-test Technician class.

>Resources may be better spent in providing new and different >services to members rather than flush it down the commode under the >banner of "fighting city hall."

Do you consider Access BPL to be "city hall" doings that the League should NOT fight? Sorry, but BPL is a clear and present danger to anyone using HF for any purpose. The ARRL needs to keep the pressure on Washington to fight BPL. After all, with lots of BPL QRM, it is hard to "work DX on HF with CW." The League only lives for HF bands.

What "services" would you suggest the ARRL be doing? Give you fancy bordered certificates (suitable for framing) for your state-of-the-art morse code ability? Provide free franking privileges for your QSL cards? Give you a spare radio in case your ready-built fails and it needs factory repair? Have a representative come and hold your hand when you contest?

The League provides a number of services already and has been doing so for years for its membership. Don't begrudge those. Just try to remember a small group of New Englanders are NOT gods of radio, just a minority membership group in the amateur radio hobby, and are a profit-making publisher of amateur radio special-interest material.

Try to remember that the US government does pretty well at governing ALL its citizens, political parties aside. An "Imperial" dictatorship can be an apt descriptor of a bunch of old men who consider themselves Elite in radio because they could emulate the professionals of 70 years ago. So, you've lost a government decision. TS happens.

No beef. Just stating that back in the 60's novices and techs had 2 meter CW priviledges that were altered at a later date.

The FCC band usage has changed many times in the past 50 years. This recent change is not unusual or anything new.

The FCC does as Congress dictates. Remember COngress holds the purse strings for the FCC as well as the power to remove and appoint commisioners. The FCC is an extension of Congress.

There's one little problem, "Stefan." Isn't ANY "Stefan Wolfe"
in the FCC CORES database. The best that can be found
are two Steven Wolfes:

Steven H. Wolfe, KC4UZW, Tech, FRN 0004408340
Steven B. Wolfe, KC9KTN, Tech, FRN 0016067183

Curses. Foiled again :-)

Probably, but it's evident he doesn't know much about reproduction.
He thinks a person can labor under a misconception. If the conception

Welp, feel free to show your Bar Association membership any time, but a "corporation" is a legal entity. <shrug>

This, of course, is a trigger for a flame war of MINUTAE waged by all the outraged troops ready to KILL all "factual error" postings. :-)

Just the same, in thousands of documents at the FCC, these legal entities have been busy, busy speaking AND recognized by the FCC. <shrug again>

Mark, ignore that old weenie. "Out of the box" has always been available when the FCC set regulations so that one did NOT have to wear radio training pants as a novice or "lesser" classes.

The old weenie is just trying some stupid, juvenile emotional-baggage "come back" because that's all he has left in his repertoire of "replies." He's tried the same macho-middle-school baggage thing with "years of interest and no ham
license." :-)

I've kept saying that my advocacy has always been to eliminate the morse code test from FCC licensing regs.
The FCC has finally, legally AGREED. Now all the morsemen
are "unhappy" and are trying to take out their frustrations on those they think are "lesser" individuals. Boo hoo for them.

It seems that kb9rqz gives you the opportunity to post from the spring board of absurdity so you can dive into the darkest reaches of ham radio existentialism.

I do enjoy your posts and consider them negative feedback of our worst characteristics. That is, you are a the negative feedback loop of hign gain op amp that stabilizes kb9rqz's wild oscillations.

Hold that thought but I'll put my money on Artificial Insinuation.

He has certainly INSINUATED so much about others and all of that very ARTIFICIAL. It must be in his jeans.

Welp, as they say, mutations happen...

Nope, Mark isn't "my springboard." EVERYONE is a springboard and it ain't any "existentialism."

Now, quit misdirecting and explain WHY you are claiming all this "ham radio experience" and there isn't any record of a "Stefan Wolfe" at the FCC. Are you a ham in Canada?
In Mexico? Where?

"Stefan," the only "wild oscillation" is YOURS about Mark.
You seem to have a wild hair itching on him. Not my problem. It's yours.

That's right, Len.

50.0 to 50.1 MHz and 144.0 to 144.1 MHz.

Incorrect.

Novices can't use those two subbands.

Never could, either.

Sorry James;

Congress does hold the purse strings as well as the abililty to enact laws which the FCC has to enforce. The President appoints commissioners and the Senate confirms the appointment. The President can request the resignation of any official in government but can only fire a few.

Nope. The earth-to-moon distance is approximately 250,000 miles.

In your opinion.

As I noted when I wrote:

"About 250,000 miles. Varies because the orbit is not a perfect circle."

Nope.

Not an "error rate".

The figure 250,000 miles is accurate to within 11.5%.
(approximately) at perigee, using your figures.

Twice in each orbit, the earth-to-moon distance is exactly 250,000 miles, btw.

> > Not too far off at apogee, though - perhaps we can

If 250,000 miles isn't accurate enough for you, then you must fault your buddy Len too. Because he stated the distance as a quarter million miles....

Yup, I made an error on the Earth-to-Mars distance. So what? The error was corrected.

Did I call anyone names for pointing out m,y mistake? Did I make fun of their education?

Why should I reply to someone who is anonymous?

Who is arguing over an error of 0.04%, Leo?
Certainly not me.

Len claimed:

"that Technician class is now bigger
than ALL other US license classes combined"

But he was wrong. 100% mistaken.

Even if we allow the inclusion of Technician Pluses in the total, they do not exceed the number of all other US license classes combined. The difference is more than 0.5%, not 0.04%.

But the percentage difference doesn't matter. Len did not specify "approximately" or cite any numbers in his claim

"that Technician class is now bigger
than ALL other US license classes combined"

All he did was make the claim, which is either true or false. Only two possible states - true or false - not a question of approximations or percentage of accuracy.

I showed Len's claim to be false - using the numbers Len provided! Those numbers are exact, not approximations.

In short:

The earth-to-moon distance is approximately 250,000 miles. Both Len and I agree on that.

Twice per orbit, the earth-to-moon distance is exactly 250,000 miles.

but

The Technician class is not now bigger than all other US license classes combined.
And if present trends continue, it never will be.

I have no interest in your personal life, Mork. However, if you post a message in a public forum (such as this) that contains details of your personal life, it is fair game for commentary, IMO.
